Cardigan Head And Vicinity

Mrs. John Corcoran, Miss Mary McMillary, Baldwin's Road, were visitors to the city on Saturday.

The citizens of Lorne Valley were shocked with sad news of the sudden passing of Alexander McLeod on Friday night, March 7. The deceased had been in good health and was about his work as usual when stricken with a heart attack, before medical aid could be summoned he passed away. The late Mr. McLeod was a prosperous farmer and was in his forty-sixth year. He leaves to mourn besides his sorrowing wife, four young children, the eldest, although only fifteen years of age is a brilliant student at Prince of Wales College, Charlottetown. The funeral took place Sunday March 9th, at 2 P. M. from his late residence to Lorne Valley Presbyterian Church. Interment in the Presbyterian Cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred McKenna, Charlottetown, are spending a few days in the country, the guests of Mrs. McKenna's brother, Mr. Chester McQuaid, Baldwin's Road.

Mr. William Goodwin C. N. R. sectionman at Vernon River, spent Sunday with his mother, Mrs. Hannah Goodwin, Baldwin's Road.

Master Gordon McLeod student at P. V. C. Charlottetown, was called home on Saturday by the sad news of the sudden death of his father, Mr. Sandy McLeod Lorne Valley.

SCOT DUCHESS HAS MANY JOBS

LONDON, March 11 (CP) - The pretty Duchess of Gloucester, wife of the King's brother, has a series of jobs which keep her busy six days a week.

The Duchess is the former Lady Alice Christabel, daughter of the eighth Duke of Buccleigh, of old Scottish lineage.

As air commandant of the Women's Auxiliary Air Force the Duchess frequently appears in the air force blue uniform and gold edged cap and travels constantly to inspect air women's activities. She is also Colonel in Chief of the King's Own Scottish Borderers. Besides this she gives a good deal of time to hospital tours, typing up parcels for prisoners of war and dealing with the heavy family mailbag.

Like many other British families, the duchess lives at Barnley Manor in Northamptonshire. When the duke gets one of his rare leaves she comes to London to join him for a few days' holiday in the Buckingham Palace suite the King puts at their disposal.

BREN MACHINE GUNS MADE IN AUSTRALIA

Melbourne, Australia. - The first batch of Australian-made Bren machineguns passed the final firing test. Manufacture Minister McEwen announced the news, saying that the Government is proceeding with the final stage of a complete chain of production in four cooperating States, none of which has previously undertaken high precision work of this character. Bren guns of 100 per cent. Australian manufacture now are in full production.

CHAPTER XXI
A "SHOOTING ACCIDENT"

"We heard some shootin' over the hill this afternoon," said the farmer, when Lorna was laid on the settee in the homestead sitting room, while his wife came running in in flustered concern. "I reckoned some chaps out from town were shooting rabbits! Ye say the chap is dead?"

"Yes," said Hawksford. "If you've a telephone I'd like to use it."

The farmer's wife said excitedly: "They're always doing it - you hear of it again and again. Trip getting over a fence, and the gun goes off and blows them to bits! You say it was her fiancé?"

"Yes. Have you some brandy or whisky you could give her? She'll be all right," said Hawksford.

"Yes, we've got a bottle of whisky in the kitchen."

And the woman hastened to get it, while the man took Hawksford to the phone in the front room.

"Why, man, you're hurt yourself!" the farmer said, catching sight of Hawksford's bloody hand.

"It's only a scratch," Hawksford said.

He closed the door as soon as the man had gone, got the exchange, and asked for a Wellington number.

"Who is it?" asked the sergeant. "What's the name?"

"That'll do when you get here."

He rang off without further ado, and a few minutes later the Wellington call came through. The homestead line was a party line, and he used it discreetly.

"Hawksford speaking. You got my report about Richards?"

"Yes, I did!"

"He's dead, shot in the bush at Gulliver's Bay, near Kalkoura. He came to a jam and became desperate."

"Shot?"

"Yes, it was unavoidable. But I'm sure everything, if it comes out, it might become an international incident."

"Good heavens! But we can't have a funeral in the Department with the Minister!"

"I suggest you phone Kalkoura, or send someone down as soon as you can. Hawksford said, "Good-bye, sir!"

He rang off.

He found the farmer in the kitchen with his gun went off.

"Have you a car?" asked Hawksford.

"Yes."

"Can you run the lady down to the hotel at Kalkoura? She ought to be put to bed and see a doctor. Her aunt is down there. I must wait here until the police come."

The farmer went out at once to get his car. Lorna was lying with a blanket over her, her eyes open, her face deadly pale. When Hawksford came in, she gazed at him dazedly. It was all so new, so terrible in recollection! Tears filled her eyes.

"I'm sorry I broke down," she managed to say.

"I don't wonder at it," he said, and his voice was low and hoarse. "They're taking you to Kalkoura in their car. Don't talk to anybody else here until the police come. Your father will tell you what is to-morrow."

She nodded. She was able to walk out to the car where the farmer was at the wheel, waiting. "Good-bye," said Hawksford.

She could only nod, as she got in beside the man, and sank tired back into her seat.

So they parted, without discussion of anything else, overshadowed by the nightmare through which they had come. The car drove jolting away in the dark on the narrow track from the homestead to the road. Half-an-hour later another car drove up, bringing a police-sergeant in plain clothes and a constable in uniform.

Hawksford was waiting to take them over the hill to bring Richards in. The sergeant asked questions.

"I don't know you, do I? What are you doing up here? Visitor to these parts?"

"Driving a car for General Sir Weston Morris. Staying at the hotel in Kalkoura," replied Hawksford.

"And this fellow?" said the sergeant, as they set out into the night with a constable and the farmer's son. "A friend of yours, was he?"

"I knew him," said Hawksford. He sensed a growing dissatisfaction in the sergeant. He walked slowly, to allow the other two men to get ahead, the sergeant lagging behind with him in the darkness, flashed his torch in Hawksford's face, and became aggressive.

"What's it all about? I asked for details on the phone and you wouldn't give them? Who is this chap, and how did it happen, and what have you to do with it?"

"I may as well explain, for your ears only, that he didn't fall on his face."

Bicycles and Motor Cycles $205,000,000

BRITISH MAKERS CELEBRATE A JUBILEE

The makers of British bicycles and motor cycle, whose Union has just completed fifty years' work, have sent $4,000,000 worth of their products overseas in the ten years from January 1, 1930.

"It has been a great story," says Britain's Minister of Transport, Lt. Col. J. T. Moore-Brabazon, in congratulating the Union on its Jubilee.

"I have always considered," he writes to Mr. H. R. Walling, director of the Union, "that the 'right' which the British cycle trade put up against foreign importation at one time was quite extraordinary. They beat everybody off our ground and became the great exporters of cycles all over the world, which was a tremendous thing to do, and added to the credit of the trade."

"Then afterwards came the motor cycle. Again we were attacked, at one time things looked bad but the same story was repeated of the excellence of our motor cycles, and they were acknowledged throughout the world. There was no record that they did not hold; no race not won; no reliability trial which was not almost automatically theirs."

"I congratulate the Union from the bottom of my heart, and hope that as they are helping today in the prosecution of the war with great effect, so after the war they will continue to flourish as they so well deserve."

BOMBER ANATOMY DISSECTED

Bombing planes must be designed not only to fight but to be built on the factory floor with a minimum of pain. Above is an artist's rendering of the "completed drawing" which is the first visualization North American aviation engineers make after the general design of the ship has been determined - and which gives the factory its basic plan for construction. Drawing is from Fortune Magazine's aviation issue for March.

MINARD'S LINIMENT

Minard's Liniment is a medicinal and artistic information, meaning information on materials, colors, and designs. Axis styles are to be designed and carried out in the materials available under the self-sufficiency programs of Germany and Italy.

"Paris has completed its task," the newspaper d'Italia said in commenting on the Axis plans. The paper means Paris as fashion leader is definitely "out."
