"Blondie's Reward" Newest "Fun Film in Bumstead Series" It's No. 23 coming up in the "Blondie" parade of comedy hits! "Blondie's Reward," the latest screen adventure in Columbia's popular series, will open at the Capitol Theatre today and all members of America's favorite fun family will be on hand.

Penny Singleton as Blondie; Arthur Lake, the slightly scatter-brained Dagwood; Larry Simms and Marjorie Kent as their two kids, Alexander and Cookie, and, of course, Daisy are all in it. Jerome Cowan, who plays Dagwood's boss, Mr. Rasteloff; and the unfortunate postman, Eddie Acuff, also come back for some more rough treatment dealt out by the head of the Bumstead clan. The two "guests" taking part in the hilarious proceedings of "Blondie's Reward" are Gay Nelson, young Columbia starlet who had the title role in "Millie's Daughter," and Ross Ford, seen recently in "The Fuller Brush Man."

In favor of the work, Dorothy gets even by marrying her best friend and co-worker, Robert Preston. In spite of objections by Ladd, the new brides are permitted by the rest of the outfit to travel along with the combine crew, which does not add to Ladd's peace of mind. Complications develop when Preston gets mixed up in some shady deals with farmers, for which the crew is held responsible, and when Dorothy stirs up additional trouble between her husband and Ladd.

According to all reports, the doings in "Wild Harvest" add up to a mighty exciting movie with top-notch performances by the principals, ably supported by Dick Erdman and Allen Jenkins.

A Lively Letter

On June 30th I received a letter which is here given in full. I am always concerned when I take this course, for many correspondents do not care to see their names in print, while others do not mind, and how is one to know what to do? However, this letter bears neither address, nor signature, so no question of that kind arises. For the rest, readers will agree that it is vivacious, witty, and mentally refreshing.

"Dear Agricola: This (Sunday) morning while I lingered at an upstairs window (and the cows were bawling their heads off at the bars as they will on a Sunday morning) I saw a small strange bird below on the telephone wire—a dapper, assured fellow, that I'm inclined to think must have been a male! Now I'm aware that my observations are only vague in helping identify the stranger, but I hope that from them you may recognize him.

This bird was smallish, about the size of a hummingbird; indeed at first I thought it must be one, though it was brownish rather than the dark hue that these are. Its head was brown, the breast greyish, a partial ring of white, like a collar, was about its throat, and it wore an enchanting tie of cerise that flashed like a jewel in the morning sun! I couldn't believe my eyes that the otherwise rather drab "clothing" held such beauty. Did I say that the bird had a long beak, like a woodpecker? But don't tell me it was one of those rascals that bore holes in our trees!

And again, what is the bird we hear in the evening, away off in the woodlands, in a rather mournful but delightful thrum, like a lullaby, but like of all things, when it is gone? Is it the articulate "soul of summer," known here only as a "sow-the-wheat," which, so far, I have never seen.

It's one heck of a thing to be so ignorant of such delights—now, isn't it? I really think that every Island teacher should know his or her Nature Study above all else, to be able to teach it to the last question of an enquiring youngster. Not merely in theory, with their minds are all crammed with the latest down-to-earth of it. Wouldn't it be better instead of teaching a city student say, the different breeds of cattle or hens, to take him out and teach him of native trees and plants and birds—stars, too, of which most of us are, to put it mildly, totally ignorant. (True, they are appreciated—and the moon too—as is evident from the number of June betrothals and weddings!)

I like to read of the birds you grow to see of the flowers curiously in bloom, of the trees you change of new or old weeds you discover, of winds and stars and weather—and altogether I much enjoy your column, preserving many a one that is "up my alley." "My best to you," from an admirer of Newsy Notes.

The bird that my correspondent observed sitting on the telephone wire was an immature male Ruby-throated Hummingbird. (The Ruby-throat is the only species of Hummingbird on our list). Mature individuals of both sexes are deep metallic green above, and whitish beneath. The male only, has a patch of ruby-red on the throat. I have never yet seen the male bird! Females in plenty haunt the garden, industriously searching the flowers, not only for nectar, but for the insects sheltering within the petals. And are they quarrelling? I once saw two hens fighting and they seemed to go into paroxysms of rage, as if intending to pull one another to pieces! Finally one was glad to escape, whilst the other pursued as long as they remained in sight.

The brownish head and drab hue of the male bird rather puzzled me till I recollected reading that young hummingbirds do not assume the green plumage at first, but are speckled and spotted for a time.

The bill of the Woodpecker is strong rather than long, and is somewhat chisel-shaped at the end. Don't be too hard upon him (or her) if he bores into the tree, for he knows there is a grub tunnelling into it and he wants that grub for dinner!

wrong in not keeping the squirrel's wings clipped." "But, baillie," protested the woman, "it's quadruped." "Quadruped or no quadruped," said the baillie, "you should have clipped its wings!"

The same Baillie Melkiejohn endeavored even to rise superior to precedent. One day he had a bunch of four or five worthless pup before him for breach of the peace. They had been slugging it out with four or five of the same sort, who, luckily for them, were in the witness box and not in the dock. The baillie gave sentence: "I find you all guilty and impose a fine of 10 shillings or ten days; and you witnesses, you were nearly as bad, so I fine you 10 shillings or seven days." The clerk of the court explained the position privately, and the baillie scratched his head and said: "I remit the fine for the witnesses at the special request of the clerk, but I warn you not to do it again!" The magistrate's court at Ayr must have been an entertaining place in the Auld Days!

Polse and self-confidence are the rewards of maturity and the woman will leave coy capers to the less self-assured adolescent. One all too common mannerism of the woman who clings to too-youthful attitudes is the coy acceptance of a compliment. The mature woman should know how to acknowledge a compliment with a gracious "thank you" or "I'm so happy you think so."

Other mannerisms which seem out of character with a mature woman's age are fluttery gestures, flirtatious behaviour in mixed company and a giggle that sounds more childish than adult.

Coyness is as much to be avoided in clothes as in mannerisms. A woman who esteems her poise will pass up chin-tied bonnets, flyaway streamers, hair ribbons, too many ruffles, frilly or flouncy effects on clothes, and girlish peasant costumes. What happens to many women who dress too youthfully for their years is that the girlish effects employed only point up their age.
