

Religion And Life

By Very Rev. George C. Pidgeon, D.D., L.L.D. First Moderator of the United Church of Canada. (Copyright)

A young man entered the university to study for the Christian ministry. After he had spent some years in Arts and Theology his father died suddenly. His mother was left without support, and there were brothers and sisters to be educated. He was the only one in the family able to provide for its dependent members. To him the call of duty was the voice of God, and he turned away from the end of his career and went into business. The studies of those past years had no direct bearing on his new duties; he was thrown on the character built up in a deeply religious home. That training enabled him to adapt himself to a new situation, and in a few years to apply his Christian principles to his business in ways which benefited the public he served and commanded his ideals to all who knew him. His students by the thousands are entering our schools and colleges to prepare for their life-work. Many of them have some particular form of service in view, and the course which they choose is calculated to give them a general education and the technical knowledge and skill which their particular line of work requires. At the same time still greater numbers of our young people, with their formal education completed, are going into business, or industry, and there each day's work adds to their equipment, experience and skill which are indispensable to the institution which they serve. But at any moment an emergency may arise to which all these things do not apply. It will call for sacrifices and services for which the work they have been doing provides no preparation, and which only character and faith can answer. Their future success and their destiny depends on deep and enduring qualities which only Christ can provide.

Ethier Blinded

Take the case of Queen Esther whose dramatic career has a book of the Bible to itself. To this day a light is kept burning in her tomb in Hamadan, Persia, to remind the people of her faith. Esther entered the royal harem with no other idea than that of becoming and remaining the king's favorite. She was not content with being established in the palace than a plot for the destruction of her people was discovered, and the prime minister of the king laid on her the responsibility of bringing before the king the actual situation. No one else could. He added to her knowledge whether she was not come to the kingdom for such a time as this? She pointed out that this meant the risk of her life, and the answer was that if the decree for the extermination of her people went into effect her life would be forfeit anyway. So Esther undertook the task and a single stroke achieved immortality. A missionary in Persia said that life in that land showed her that Esther must have been a very young girl. How could a mere child meet such a crisis? The answer is—her training. She had been brought up in a religious home. As a member of the Chosen Race in exile she had been taught the story and hopes of her people, their faith in the one God. His choice of her people and His laws given to govern their lives. Her mind was stored with her people's memories of the past, their prophets and their people, their heroes and what they were and did. One so trained could never be a creature of circumstance; she was prepared to conquer it or die.

TRINITY Y. P. U.—Trinity Young People's Union held its regular meeting last Friday evening, opening it with a very special service. Mr. David Barwise, a member of the Union for many years, was accepted by the P. E. I. Presbytery of the United Church of Canada as a candidate for the ministry. Rev. K. G. Sullivan, M.A. B.D., Chairman of Presbytery, opened the service with a prayer. Rev. T. G. Head, B.A., B.D., read the scripture lesson, Romans 10:1-15, and led us in prayer. The address was given by Rev. L. M. Murray, B.A., B.D., chairman of the Presbyterial Committee of Christian Education, who presented to the meeting a picture of the sorrow, heartaches and satisfactions in the life of the ministry, and the challenge presented to young people of today who enter full-time work in the church. He stated that people inside and outside of the church were reaching the conclusion that this unsettled world needs more Christians who followed the motto, "Jesus Christ is Lord and I'm not ashamed to own Him mine." Mr. Barwise was presented to the Presbytery by Rev. H. E. Ashford, M.B.E., B.A., B.D., Rev. K. G. Sullivan conducted the very moving service during which he advised Mr. Barwise to be sure he was doing God's will and not his own in his work as a Minister. Miss Enid Morson was pianist for the hymns of faith and dedication which were sung during the service. The evening was closed with a social period during which Mr. Barwise was introduced by our president, Miss Wilma Watts, and spoke briefly but eloquently on his aims and aspirations.

BULLETINS FROM BIRDLAND

WINIFRED E. WILSON

PALM WARBLER. Absolutely the most difficult to please of all our Warblers is the Palm. Only one type of country will do for nesting. The space necessary for most birds' home grounds is counted in yards; this one insists on a bog covering many acres, or perhaps several miles. Besides, the bog must be the kind where small birds are growing surrounded by a particular species of moss, known as sphagnum. Consequently, it is needless to expect to find a Palm Warbler during the summer unless you happen to be near one of our really large bogs, such as Mer Blue, close to Ottawa, or Lanoraie Bog, not far from Montreal. But migration provides an opportunity for catching a glimpse of it. Having spent the breeding season in north eastern Canada, around this time the subspecies called Yellow Palm takes to the Atlantic seaboard, and following the coast line flies down to Florida, where it meets the western or more properly speaking, the Interior variety, called simply "Palm Warbler", which has summered in the northern part of our Prairie Provinces and Ontario. In Florida the two fraternize during the winter. The breeding territories of the two meet at approximately the eastern boundary of Ontario; they seem to overlap in the Ottawa area. Occasionally a Palm strays far east; one was discovered nesting down the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

There are a few definite facts to go by in order to tell these species apart. The Yellow Palm is the larger; it always has a yellow line over its eye, and its underparts are a brighter yellow. The sexes are alike in both the species, but in wearing their autumn costumes, a greyish-brown, sometimes with indications of a chestnut, dull of a red cap; the under side a dull, while vaguely striped rather than yellow with red streaks as in spring. Juveniles resemble Thrushes more than they do their own parents; pale brown above, with spotted scrubby, sandy washes. The eternal piping, these Warblers have the tall-pipery habit; so much so that they have been nicknamed "Yellow Tip-ups".

Among the first Warblers to appear in spring, even before the end of April, they should be looked for near water courses, and in low scrubby, sandy washes. The eternal titling is a great aid to identification. The male's "tee, tee" song is insignificant, not likely to be of any help. The nest, rather rarely made in a mossy or grassy, often carefully lined with feathers. Where do Ducks nest?
