TWO NEW JACKETS SHOWN BY TRIGERE

NEW YORK — Pauline Trigere introduces two new jackets. One is a slope-shouldered cape with points in front, and side slits for the arms to come through into pockets. Square patch pockets are placed for the hands. The neckline is wide and round, with a rolled collar of the fabric. He wanted is a brief bolero type, flared in the back.

The "flyaway" bolero is the darling of several designers, notably Jo Copeland, Hattie Carnegie and the "flaraway" is shown by Ben Reig. Designers interpret it in various ways, but it is always brief and flared in the back, or all around. Jo Copeland makes them of wool and lines them with the same print as a blouse, for dark-colored suits.

'WASHED' LOOK

NEW YORK — Colors are subdued, soft, many with a "washed" look, except for such notable exceptions as the orange tones, called capucine by many designers, and shown by most of them. Navy and a dark gray, also medium brown tones, sometimes called Tabac, sage tones, are used for daytime costumes, which sport pastels and a few vivid accents are seen for later in the day and evening. There's much white, natural and the prints are lovelier than they've ever been. Yellow, in both costumes and accents is important, especially as used by Jo Copeland and Ben Reig.

'CELERY KING'

A Toronto Magistrate denied an application for bail on behalf of three men who were arrested following investigation of alleged attempts made to extort $10,000 from Michael Bidner, the "celery king" who is said to have cleaned up $180,000 in recent deals.

"No bail should be granted under any circumstances for these three," said the Crown Attorney when Sam Adams, 32; Joseph Adams, 29; and George Miloff, 19, appeared in court. They were remanded and held in custody. Telephone calls had been made to Bidner threatening harm to himself and family if $10,000 was not paid.

Travelling conditions on Saturday proved to be extremely hazardous in this district with many cars stranded in water-filled ditches. The downpour and melting snow made the streets a river of water, making pedestrians tread the walks with caution. The Montague-Charlottetown bus became stalled at the bottom of Bell's Hill, necessitating transference of passengers by cars. Motorists coming from the city reported dangerous travelling with the cars sliding from one side to the other making chains almost useless. Yesterday with the quick change in weather, the streets are sheets of ice, involving greater danger to motorists. In the town the sidewalks and grades have been sanded reducing the hazard correspondingly, however, many roads are still very dangerous, and motorists have been exhorted to use caution while driving. It is expected that a few more three days sanding operations will be completed in the town.

Plans were made for receiving clothing for needy Europeans, the donations to be left at the church where a box will be packed. A feature of the social period was a debate "Resolved that the new look is better than the old", with Miss Annie MacEachern and Mr. N. D. Nicholson for the affirmative and Mrs. S. D. Reid and Mrs. N. D. Nicholson for the negative. The debate provoked much argumentation and a great deal of merriment, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all. The continual late arrival of the daily train with passengers and mail has become a major concern and many are expressing the opinion that the County Board of Trade should ascertain from the proper authorities if the running of an extra freight train once or twice a week over this line would not alleviate this situation, which works an inconvenience and hardship on many people and communities.

The continued heavy snow storms this winter have piled up large banks and cuttings on the railroad and as a result quite a number of men have found much needed employment, shovelling the snow. In this town, as in many, which depends on seasonal trades and occupations for employment, the unemployed situation is quite acute.

"At the various pre-Lenten activities the writer viewed without alarm an interested and interesting visitor, Mr. James Pendergast of Kensington. Mr. Pendergast does not subscribe to the tenets of the comics and tabloids that "in-laws are the root of all evil," and has been visiting his sisters-in-law and their families. The genial sportsman is a faithful reader of the Georgetown Notes and believing that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing," he came East to see for himself the social, religious and athletic life of the Community. He was an impartial observer at the Georgetown-Morell hockey match and with his usual perspicacity pointed out the outstanding ability, also the speed and ability of both teams. The youthful goal of Morell won well-deserved compliments on his work. Mr. Pendergast demonstrated on his own accomplishments, when he won first prize in the Card playing at the social given by the Holy Mtrng Society. The bus service had not been resumed on Thursday and like the Wise men who come from the East he returned by another way, after a pleasant vacation.
