RAILWAY COMMISSION BILL BEFORE THE HOUSE

The Proposed Body will Exercise all the Powers Vested in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

OTTAWA, March 23.—The Minister of Railways introduced his Railway Commission Bill in the House to-day. The bill, is substantially the same as Mr. Blair introduced last year. The changes do not materially affect the bill, which has been perfected in every way.

"The proposal," he said "is to abolish the existing railway committee of the Privy Council, and to substitute for it a Railway Commission composed of members independent of the Government and of Parliament in a sense, though not in the broadest sense but in a practical sense, and capable by experience and ability of making as efficient as possible the legislation we are now proposing to place on the statute book. There are various kinds of railway commissions. Commissions have been constituted in other countries of a purely advisory character, not possessing any controlling or executive power. Other commissions have been created, particularly in some of the Colonial dependencies of the Crown, which have been under their management and control the Government of these Colonies."

Mr. Blair went on to say that they had waited to avail themselves of the experience of these countries in which railway commissions were established. As far back as 1873 a railway commission was established in Great Britain. They have also turned their attention to the States of the Union for what had been done under their legislation. The information obtained by Mr. McLean was also utilized. The railway commission in Great Britain had been fairly satisfactory. It did not do away with all difficulties.

"The American legislation respecting the interstate law," said the Minister "was arrived at by a compromise between the transportation on the one hand and the producing interests on the other. One side was probably contending that there was no need at all for such a tribunal and the other side insisted that there was, especially in the public interest that they should be established and between the two a compromise was reached whereby, while these tribunals were set up they were not endowed with the power which all agree are imperatively necessary if it is to be efficient work, but notwithstanding the defects admittedly existing under the systems in force in the various States of the Union and the United States as a whole and many more we have studied, we believe that system has done much good. These commissions have done a very great deal of good.

"The hands of the Commission we have invested with large powers; we have given it more executive authority and we have perhaps gone beyond that in other respects. The Commission under this bill will exercise all the powers which are now invested in the committee of the Privy Council. We propose to constitute a Court to consist of three members or five members. I confess to a personal preference for three but I do not assume that my judgment is necessarily sounder than that of others, and I invite an expression of opinion from both sides on this point, when we come to discuss the subject in detail. Therefore Bride Disappears When Husband Loses Position Day After Wedding.

NEW YORK, March 20.—Introduced Tuesday, married Thursday and separated Saturday. Such is the story of the matrimonial venture of Margaret Temple, nineteen years old, of No. 25 Romaine avenue, Jersey City, and Luther Westervelt, twenty-five years old, of No 36 P. Marapo avenue, Greenville.

They met at the home of a friend Tuesday night of last week. While escorting Miss Temple to her home Westervelt confessed his love and asked her to be his. She told him he could have his answer on Wednesday night. The answer was "Yes." On Thursday night they were married.

Friday morning Westervelt was late in arriving at his place of employment in Bayonne, a wire factory, and the superintendent told him his services were no longer required. He returned to his bride and told her the sad news.

"How are we going to live?" she asked. "I'll soon get a job," replied Westervelt. On Saturday Westervelt went in search of work. His bride and Mrs. Quinn, with whom the young couple were boarding, visited the dry goods stores. While Mrs. Quinn was looking at the spring styles in hats, Mrs. Westervelt said:—"I have an appointment with a friend I will meet you at the house later." She did not return. Westervelt has asked the police to find his young wife.
