The Double Act A Romance of the Theatre BY MARION TOMLINSON

"They like my looks," she admitted, "but they all talk about me as if I were part of the hangings. Listen to this—"

"The effect of that incredible gold hair against a curtain changed by some subtle lighting device from rose to violet, from violet to green, was one of the most beautiful scenic arrangements ever produced in the English theatre,—and so on, paragraphs of it."

"You're hard to please, little girl," said Grenoble, trying to disguise the fact that the notices were immensely satisfactory to him. "When before has a newcomer had three-quarters of every review given over to ecstatic praise of her beauty?"

"You see," explained Rosemary hesitatingly, "I've done nothing to earn any praise, except merely to do what you've told me. I'm not ungrateful to you, please believe that, but— for seven-teen years of my life, my father gave his whole self to training me, and to be a real artist—to act. In throwing away all that he taught me, and just becoming part of the scenery, I feel I'm being ungrateful to him."

"Well," said Grenoble, feigning indifference, "you can always free yourself, you know. Go out and proclaim yourself no fairy princess at all, but only a little actress from the three-a-day. Then you might get a shop in the chorus if you hung about agents' offices long enough. Or, if you'd rather, you can sever your contract with me by cutting off your hair, or developing a squint."

Rosemary said nothing. She had in spite of herself become accustomed to the luxury with which Grenoble had surrounded her. And she would not have been human if she had not been pleased at the tributes to her beauty she had received, though her feeling that she was betraying her ideals of art was sincere.

Grenoble, seeing her hesitation, said shrewdly: "Don't make yourself unhappy, child. The way to fame is often a road paved by broken ideals. You can act, I'll admit that sincerely. Your playing of that Cockney boy in Layton's play was a little gem. But I've met a dozen people who can act, out of hundreds who thought they could, and only once in all my experience of beauties have I come upon hair and eyes and skin like yours. They're things to dream of, and I'll set the whole civilized world dreaming of them if you'll only do as I direct."

Rosemary had only half listened to Grenoble's speech. Through her mind had been running the memory of the dreadful months after her father's death, when she had desperately from one agent's office to another. What good had her ability to act done her then? There had been comments on her beauty. Some of them it sickened her to remember. She had had weeks without enough to eat, when at last Layton had engaged her.

"All right, I'll carry on," she said, "and truly, truly, I'm grateful for all this." Rosemary indicated the dainty drawing-room, with its panels of pale blue satin painted with sprays of peach blossom. "You didn't know it, but I hadn't a penny when I went to see you that morning."

Stubborn Coughs Ended by Recipe, Mixed at Home

Saves $2. No Cooking! So Easy!

Here is the famous old recipe which millions of housewives have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up stubborn coughs. It takes but a moment to prepare, and costs very little, but it positively has no equal for quick, lasting relief.

From any drugist, get 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a 16 oz. bottle and fill the bottle with granulated sugar syrup, made with 2 cups of sugar and one cup of water, stirred a few moments until dissolved. No cooking needed—it's so easy! Thus you make 16 ounces of better remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times the cost. It never spoils and children love its taste.

This simple mixture soothes and heals the inflamed throat membranes with surprising ease. It loosens the germ-laden phlegm and eases chest soreness in a way that is really astonishing. Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway Pine, the most reliable healing agent for severe coughs. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

Such inexperience of reality might have been fatal to her after she had been thrown out alone into the rough and tumble world of the theatre, but, except for some months of hardship, and a few weeks' work with Layton, she evidently had not had time for the pettiness and jealousies of others to penetrate her rampant dreams.

"You're safe with me, my dear," he said, unexpectedly, and as Rosemary looked up at him inquiringly, he made a gesture that was almost appealing. "I'm glad you never thought you weren't. You are best here. I don't like to think what might happen to you if you had to fight your way—you with those trusting eyes and that beauty you don't seem even yet to realize. As for Dolores, she doesn't matter. She'll play out the run of this piece, and then she can do as she likes. I'll keep her away from you if I can."

Grenoble had a visitor that afternoon. It was a young man who rushed upon him with agony in his eyes, still wearing the dress clothes he had put on for the opening of "Shower of Gold" the night before.

Anthony had gone to see the revue in spite of himself. He had feared what he might see but it was impossible for him to keep away from where he knew he should see Marigold. So, from a stall which he had obtained with infinite difficulty and much more money than he could afford, he had watched the exhibition of the girl of his dreams before thousands of eyes.

The C. C. C. Sisters had a very good hockey practice on Friday afternoon in Cornwall Rink. Several of the members are attending college and we miss them, but hope to carry on. The following girls were on hand Friday: Sophie Newson, Jean Frizzell, Ruby McLean, Alma Newson, Helen Scott and Lillian Newson, William Ross acted as coach for the afternoon.

Mr. Hazen Howard accompanied by Mrs. Agnes Vessey and Mrs. Maud Thompson, motored to York last week where they attended the funeral of the late Richard Vessey.

On Monday night the second league game was played in Cornwall Rink between the Bulldogs of Nine Mile Creek and the C. C. C. boys. This was a good game of hockey and ended in the score one nothing in favor of the Bulldogs.

MIXING OF DRINKS CAUSE OF DEATH

Hard cider and whiskey—a mixture which the jury was told was always dangerous and sometimes fatal—was blamed for Kunkel, a single, 40 year old farmer, dropping dead on the road near Formosa.

"His stomach was so tremendously dilated," the jury found, "that it shoved the heart out of place and stopped its action, causing death." The finding followed the report of the autopsists, Dr. H. H. Sinclair of Walkerton and Dr. O'Toole of Midway.

Kunkel had already had some cider in the day and was later given whiskey.

YEAR'S PEACE PROGRAM IS PLANNED BY WOMEN

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—(A. P.)—Carrie Chapman Catt and her "cause and cure of war" cohorts—women of 11 national organizations—came to the United States capital recently to discuss the 1933 peace campaign. All her campaigning career—that 43 years now—Mrs. Catt has been mapping discussion forums, and she pronounces this week's peace program "the best I have ever made."

Speakers at the opening session today of the eighth annual conference on the "cause and cure of war" were Miss Mary E. Woolley, only American woman delegate to the Geneva arms parley; James G. McDonald, chairman of the foreign policy association of the conference, and Professor James T. Shotwell, of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Definite are the results that Mrs. Catt works for, and expects actually to occur, that the United States will join the world court this year; that world peace will arrive within a century.

She says that having experienced the actuality of victory in the long suffrage battle, she knows the "feel" of a progressing cause as it conquers prejudices, little by little.

At 74, she still so dominates her cause—it has been peace ever since suffrage was won—that her followers won't permit her to remain "retired" under the title of "honorary chairman."

THIS INTOLERABLE BURDEN

Our Drink Bill is enormous,—an intolerable burden. Only for our befuddled brains it would not be permitted. A clear headed nation would surely throw it off. Look at some of the figures.

Great Britain's Drink Bill for 1931 was 260,000,000 pounds, or roughly $1,250,000,000. Great Britain's War Debt to the United States, of which we hear so much, a debt she will be paying for the next 62 years, for over two generations, at the rate of half a million dollars a day, amounted in a lump sum to $4,600,000,000 in December, 1922. Since that time Great Britain has alone drunk up this debt three times over. She drinks up her war debt to the United States in about three and a half years. It sounds incredible, but nevertheless it is too terribly true. In 1931, the lowest in recent years, it meant an average expenditure per head over the entire population of more than $25.00.

And look at the avalanche of beer, wine and spirits pouring down the gulleys and into the capacious stomachs of the nation—one half a bulk barrel of beer, one quarter gallon of proof spirits, and one third gallon of wine, c'd'er, etc., for every man, woman and child in the nation. It is an enormous bill. It is an intolerable burden. It is an irrational policy.

Canada's Drink Bill for 1929-30 was over $197,000,000 and for 1930-31 it was over $173,000,000, all sold legally, and not including the large sales of smuggler's and boot-legger's stuff. Compare this with the provincial revenues. The Canada Year Book states that the total ordinary revenue of the nine provinces for 1929 was $183,598,024. Roughly we Canadians spend as much on drink as on all our provincial government services. It sounds incredible. It suggests a sort of national insanity. Let us take another striking illustration of the enormity of our Drink Burden. The net Public Debt of Canada (1930) is slightly over two billion dollars—the accumulations of more than sixty years in extensive public works plus the lavish expenditures during the great war. The annual interest on this sum is $121,566,213. Our Drink Bill would pay for this interest year by year as it comes due and leave $60,000,000 in the national treasury besides. Our Drink Bill in twelve years would pay off the entire national debt. Our Drink Bill is an intolerable burden.

Charles H. Mayo, the noted surgeon of Rochester, Minn.

Will send our nation soon to smash.

A. Patterson, assisted by Rev. W. J. McLeod. Mrs. W. A. Patterson rendered very effectively "In the Garden." Much sympathy is extended to the surviving members of the family in their bereavement. Interment at the United Church Cemetery, Cavendish.

This horse won first prize at the Fredericton Exhibition in the driving stallion class. This horse although only young shows the promise of some great future speed and some interesting races are looked forward to, when the ice gets in shape for trotting.—N

Murray Harbor

The death of Mrs. Reuben Cahoon, Cape Bear, on the morning of January 22nd was unexpected. The sincere sympathy of the community goes out to the bereaved family and relatives of the late Mrs. Cahoon.

During the recent heavy north-east storm which did much damage, Murray Harbor and vicinity suffered as compared with other parts of the country. Very little snow fell, and a little rain which helped conditions. Tides were extremely high on Friday and Saturday, and in places ice was washed up on the highways.

The funeral of the late Miss E. Gordon, daughter of the late Mr. Robert Gordon, was held from the United Church on Saturday, January 28th. Inclement weather and bad roads prevented many friends

Youth Faces Murder Charge

YARMOUTH, N. S., Feb. 2.—(The Canadian Press)—A letter and a statement the first seized as Albert Hatfield lay in Little Brook Jail on a charge of murdering John Jedry, the second written by the prisoner there at the instance of police, were introduced at Hatfield's preliminary hearing today. Both told of the fight at St. Albans De Clare in a postoffice on January 24, "I fired at his legs and hit him in the heart" the statement said.

Magistrate Emil Stehlin adjourned the hearing one week to determine his jurisdiction as to the changing of the charge, defence counsel V. J. Potter, K. C., having argued for committal for manslaughter rather than murder. Mary Rose Robicheau, widow and Hatfield's foster mother, took the stand in tears today and told of Albert coming home to tell her "Johnnie is dead. I killed him. I'm sorry, but it is too late. I should have let myself be beat up. For a long time you have been telling me I am at a foolish age. Ever since I have been so high Johnnie has been after me."

The letter introduced by Crown prosecutor Frank Jones, K. C., began: "Dear darling—Just a few lines to let you know I am a murderer," going on to say that the writer had gone "to see a school teacher," that Johnny "didn't like that," and had "told another guy" about Hatfield. "So I went to the post office and John was there and asked him why he had told lies on me. He struck me in the eye so I took my pistol and fired for his legs and I struck him in the heart. Now I am in prison waiting for my sentence. . . ." The letter was signed John Albert Leblanc.

Hatfield for a time lived with a Leblanc family and took their name. The name of the person to whom it was intended was not disclosed. Ulysses and Bernadette Comeau son and daughter of the postmaster, told of Jedry taking off his glasses and striking the accused just as Hatfield got up from his chair. A shot was fired and the light went out. No one was able to say who blew out the lamp.

The Crown prosecutor opposed the defence contention that the charge should be changed to one of manslaughter. "If the prosecutor is right," Pottier retorted, "you would have to send a man up for assault if the evidence showed he stole blueberries—if you have no right to change the charge in making commitments for trial. Commitments must be made according to the evidence offered."

can be secured and Dr. Robins leaving no stone unturned to give the theatre going public one of the best entertainments ever staged in this city. The names of the characters and specialties will appear in the press at an early date.
