Great concentrations of Nazi transport planes and picked parachute forces are reported in the Bulgarian ports of Verna and Burgas, poised for invasion of the Crimea and the Caucasu. The Luftwaffe already has been bombing Sebastopol and other Crimean points, In London, there are persistent reports that British forces will come up from Iran to fight side by side with the Russians in defence of the Caucasus oil fields. "Waterloo will be fought in the east this time", said a B.B.C. spokesman.

CHAPTER V

The room showed the evidences of a very "high" party. There were several empty bottles and glasses on a low table not far from the bed.

The open window looked out over New York's Central Park, twenty stories below and the autumn sunlight lay thick in the room, indicating that the time was well past noon.

The telephone rang sharply. There was no movement under the mound of bedclothes until the telephone had rung four or five times. Then the mound turned over and a man's flushed face beneath a tousled thatch of darkly red hair loomed above the covers. A few choice words of profanity blistered the air as he snatched the telephone and answered it.

"Hello, Aleck," said an offensively cheerful masculine voice at the other end of the line. "Glad to know you're still alive. I suppose it would be expecting too much to ask you to show your face at the office occasionally?"

"Why should I?" demanded Aleck. "You've seen my face before—and it hasn't changed any——"

"Well, it's going to, feller, if you don't get yourself down to this office within the next hour," snapped the other man. "I've got a job of work for you. Either you come on down or I'll come up there and drag you down! After all, you know, we do pay you a salary."

A spark of interest touched Aleck's heavy eyes. "Oh, yes—that reminds me—what happened to this week's check? I don't recall getting it."

"You wouldn't! You got it last week, in advance, and I cashed it for you myself!"

"You mean I've spent it? Oh, but see here, Hobarts, I've got bills to meet—creditors are hounding me," pleaded Aleck plaintively.

"Get yourself down here within an hour and I'll throw your creditors a sop or two. Do the job I've got lined up for you and I might even consider paying them off!" said Hobarts.

Aleck's eyes opened wide. "In full?"

"In full, you pirate!"

Aleck said sweetly, "Just whom do you want murdered this time?"

"All we want you to do is help out on a little publicity stunt the advertising department has cooked up."

"Sky writing?"

"Don't be a fool! And get down here as fast as you can if you don't want to be fed to the wolf that's undoubtedly camping on your doorstep at this very moment."

"I'll be there in a couple of hours," promised Aleck.

"By three-thirty, my hearty," said Hobarts, "or a certain red-headed flyer will be off our pay roll!"

With that, he hung up.

Aleck Randall signed, shook his head a little, winced with pain and decided that was no way to treat the sort of head he owned at the moment. He telephoned the bar downstairs for a pick-me-up and, when it had come, crawled out of bed and took an icy shower.

After dressing, he ordered breakfast sent up from the apartment hotel's restaurant and swallowed several cups of strong black coffee. Then, a little pale, a little dark around the eyes, but himself again, he went down to the street and hailed a taxi.

Half an hour later, he was entering the offices of the airline by which he was employed. It was a new company but powerful financially.

He was ushered at once into the office of Hobarts.

"Well, Aleck, so you finally made it," Hobarts greeted him. "Here—have a look at that."

Aleck took the newspaper that was held out to him, and looked down at a picture of a girl struggling with four young men in front of a plane, while a fifth young man tore off a bit of her slip.

"Cute youngster," he said. "Silly of her not to have worn a shirt and trousers for her first solo — might have saved a lot of wear and tear on the good old lingerie. But what's all this got to do with me?"

"Read the story," snapped Hobarts.

Aleck did so, then grinned. "The fellow who wrote this must have had a terrific down on the kid." He quoted aloud. "My father could have flown to Paris if he had thought of it—only, of course much better than Lindbergh did'."

"Never mind that part," said Hobarts. "You see what she says about forming a women's flying outfit to help out in case of war? Well, I want you to hop down to that burg and give her a helping hand."

"Give her a helping hand?" repeated Aleck dazedly. "Say, what in blazes are you talking about?"

"I mean I want you to help this kid organize a bunch of cute girl flyers like herself. I know I can leave it to you to see to it that most of them are pretty. Of course, there'll have to be a few of them with brains—though not too many brains. Anyway, Parsons thinks it would be swell publicity if we backed the stunt, and I agree with him."

Aleck put a hand to his head to assure himself that, after all, it wasn't spinning.

Hobarts continued briskly. "Parsons' suggestion is very good. It is that the girl be smartly outfitted — we might set a few new fashions for feminine flyers while we're about it. Then, you are to fly her about the country to all the principal cities. She'll give talks before women's clubs and the like, to round up recruits for her project. We'll see to it that she gets plenty of advance notices in the press, and the whole thing should be worth a lot of publicity for us."

Aleck waved a feeble hand. "Sure, boss—it sounds swell. Only why do you need me to ride herd on the little chickadee? Isn't she capable of getting about by herself?"

"Your reputation as a flyer will attract much more attention to her. Without you, the thing might fizzle, but you'll draw the crowds and guarantee that the press gives her space. Besides, I want you to keep the youngster from realizing the publicity angle for us. Make her think you're backing her simply because you're keenly interested in this plan of hers. See to it that we get a maximum of publicity without the kid suspecting anything except that she is providing her country with a whole mess of pilots in petticoats who are going to save the world for Democracy."

Aleck sighed. "I'll see what can be done. When do you want me to get started?"

"As soon as possible. Send the girl a wire, telling her you're flying down to talk things over with her. Can you leave tomorrow?"

"Okay—if you insist."

After Aleck had departed, Hobarts sent for Parsons, the company's advertising manager.

"Well, Randall is taking on the job," he reported. "You look after all the details—don't count on him for anything except taking charge of the girl and piloting her about the country. This should be a big thing for us, Parsons, if all goes well."

"The only thing that can go wrong, as I see it, is Randall!" said Parsons flatly. "That guy's 'bottle trouble' is getting to be serious."

"Nonsense!" said Hobarts. "He doesn't drink when he's flying. Besides, I'd say Randall could fly better drunk than the majority of pilots do cold sober."

"Maybe," said Parsons skeptically, "but I'd trust my neck to a less spectacular pilot, thanks!"

ANNUAL MEETING

QUEEN'S COUNTY CONSERVATIVE ASSOCIATION

Oddfellows Hall, Richmond St. Charlottetown, P.E.I.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2nd, 8 P.M. (Standard Time)

Election of Executive and routine business.

SPECIAL SPEAKER

Gordon Graydon M. P., National Chairman and Dominion Organizer.

Each Poll is entitled to five delegates. It is requested that each District hold a preliminary meeting at 7.30 in the same hall to select their representatives on the Executive, so that the regular meeting can begin promptly on time.

A. R. McINNIS, Secretary. P. W. TURNER President.

L-335-9-18-22.27 31

M. P. DIES

Arthur B. Damude, 51, Liberal M. P. for Welland county, died suddenly Sept. 15 at his home in Fonthill, Ont. Born in Thorold township, he married in 1912 and has one son, Lieut Ross Damude, Lincoln and Welland regiment.

CRIMEA CUT OFF

Severing of communications between Russia's Crimean peninsula and the mainland, reported on Sept. 18, constitutes one phase of the gravest military situation the Soviet has faced since the start of the war. If the Nazis launch a full-scale attack into the Crimea, Russians admit the peninsula could hardly be reinforced. Farther north, Marshal Budenny is said to be withdrawing part of his forces from Kiev in the face of pincer movements by two German armies in the Ukraine.

BRIGHTEN HOME WITH MIRRORS

Mirrors can be used effectively to brighten a corner, to give cheer to an entry hall, to handle a dull strip between two windows, and for countless other features Decorators both professional and amateur, go in for mirror glass. The newest homes use lots of glass and glass bricks as an integral part of the design, and glass does wonders when one is remodelling. One of the best ways to point up a room and to give it new interest is to use mirrored accessories and mirrors.

MIRRORED WALL

We have in mind one dull, very average bedroom that emerged from a remodelling job a real masterpiece Two closets were built at one end of the long room in order to cut off the size. Mirror glass was installed on the doors, and another strip of mirror glass between the two closets. So when the two doors were opened, there was a magnificent triple mirror. When closed, the space looked like a mirrored wall.

The dark entry hall of the house was treated to a tall torch lamp and a low mirror-topped table reflecting wall brackets filled with growing plants. In the living room and awkward space between two mirrors was covered with mirror glass and gave new interest to the room. Glass strips were placed on the fireplace and a glass firescreen framed in dull bronze was used. Another idea that gives a room both charm and luxury is the use of tinted mirror glass above the mantel.

HANGING SHELVES

There are charming hanging shelves of mirror glass for corners and plate glass shelves in mirrored niches will do things for any room, especially for the dining room. Tinted glass shelves or backgrounds are lovely to set off prized china or silver. Little mirror panels for electric light switches are smart and very inexpensive. For tables there's nothing so smart as a mirror glass top. If you can't go a whole dining table glass surface, then settle for a nest of glass-topped tables or a smart tinted mirror glass topped coffee table. Glass accessories are exceedingly smart.
