FASHION IS JUST "STRINGING US ALONG" We're just stringing ourselves along, that's what we're doing. And if we aren't we ought to be ashamed of ourselves because we can't be smart—in the Paris manner—if we don't. A touch of string color or material is as essential this season to the woman who would be elegant as it has hitherto been to a brown paper parcel. Neat tailored suits and three quarter coats in coarsest linen, completely stringy both in color and texture, are the smartest things in Paris. String colored footwear in soft kid leather shoes make the smartest feet in Paris. Crocheted jumpers of string are everywhere—even gloves have gone stringy both as to color and fabric.

Hats are towering upward with the new high pointed Schiaparelli Pickle cap rivaling the established fez, now a bit on the outskirts of the mode. Dress necklines show no signs of becoming lower, and there is a rumor going around that the fall will see an especially high-cut kidskin Oxford shoe as the vogue for footwear.

Fashionable functions in Paris recently have been quite Magpie affairs with every other woman in black and white. Black and white printed silk gowns are accentuated by long gloves and cool sandals of black kid and large black hats.
