IS IT PROGRESS

The latest of minor scientific achievements is a machine developed which automatically cooks a frankfurt by radio waves and delivers it to the customer in a heated roll, complete with mustard. Perhaps this is progress of a sort.

But the gourmet cannot help but regret this latest step toward standardizing our tastes. It is difficult enough already—and sometimes impossible— to get restaurants to serve food according to our individual liking. But what chance will we have when our "blue plate specials" are served from a vending machine?

The Mulberry Bush
by
HELEN TOPPING MILLER

Mike pushed back his chair and set down his cup with a little click. All that his life had done to him, all the freezing nights, the burning days, the tense hours of hiding creeping, through forbidden ground, the loneliness of seas, the loneliness that was Mike himself—eagle loneliness, aloof, challenging, impatient, was in his eyes. He said harshly, without preamble, "This is a heck of a life Ginny Warfield. Why don't you marry me and make a human being out of me?"

She wanted to cry and she wanted bitterly to laugh. There was a queer anger in the air, and a singing sweet wild danger. She did love Mike—there was no use lying to herself, no use evading—Her voice had a reedy falseness in it.

"I think," she said carefully, "that that might be a good idea—but for one thing—but for two things—"

"What two things?" demanded Mike.

"You've never been exposed to this intimate atmosphere before. Domesticity—a lady in a smock, coffee for two Your susceptible Mike, and I never would have believed it But for two things it might work—but for the fact that you'd hate being married to me—or to any woman. And but for the fact that I'd probably hate being married to you."

Mike glared at her. "What's the matter with me? I'm kind to dogs and children I don't get drunk I shave every day. I wouldn't beat you."

"You'd hate being possessed, Mike You'd fight it You'd be frantic, in no time at all, to be free. And running a jail never did appeal to me as a life work."

"Marriage doesn't have to be a chain gang, Ginny That's what people think—that's one of the magnificent stupidities that has made the world the quarreling mess that it is I'd be good to you, Ginny—and we'd both be free."

She shook her head "Love can't be free,' she said. "Not my kind of love."

"Then your kind of love is wrong." He was grim. "What difference would it make if I were in Tarragona, or Acapulco, or Timbuktu— if we had something everlasting that belonged only to us—to you and me and to nobody else on earth?"

She could not say the words that stung her tongue could not free the doubt that was tearing miserably at her—she could not say, "Nothing would ever be everlasting to you, Mike." She could not hurt Mike that way.

So she said with a kind of desperate patience "Women are different. They want to hold things close. They've had to guard the goodness and the beauty of the world so long, while the men went out to work and to fight Their minds haven't been trained to be content with ideas only They want something they can hold in their hands—they want nearness, they want warmth."

"That's isn't love I don't know what it is—some kind of maternal thing run wild, a kind of female tyranny Women want to build fences around happiness and then sit outside the gate with a flaming sword in their hands or a shotgun on their knees, and it won't work Can't they see that happiness has wings and take to the air and flies away if you wall it in?"

"You mean—that if I set you free—you'd come back, Mike?"

"Of course I'd come back Straight back to you But if you tried to chain me I'd hate the chain and so would any other man."

"But if you were free—I'd be free, too Suppose you came flying back, all expansive and triumphant and complacent with grand impulses, graciously ready to give me an hour or two and a smile—suppose you came back like that and I weren't there? How would you like that—if I liked freedom too?"

"You know too darned many long words, Ginny," he said scowling, sitting on the edge of his chair his hands in fists between his knees. "You make a simple thing into something like a metaphysical problem out of a book."

"I make it into the problem we have to live with You don't want to marry me, Mike Not really. And I don't want to marry you—not that way."

"You know everything, don't you?" He walked to the window, drew the curtains together, shot them back again, intrigued by the mechanism.

He was a a boy, she was thinking. She was older before she learned that all men are boys, that it is the youth in them that will not be tamed that has built nations and linked the together by wings and steel and crackling magic of science

When he was gone she sat for a long time at the window, looking out, seeing nothing, while dusk fell over the river and the room grew dark'

Not once had Mike Paull said that he loved her'

If he had said it she would have been lost She did love Mike—and loving Mike was like loving the roving trade wind that no woman can hold with her hands or with her heart.

Mike Paull walked a long way over the rough sunken brick sidewalks of old Georgetown, down the hill to the roaring corner where Sunday evening traffic struggled for passage over the Key Bridge He walked out on the bridge and stood for a little, leaning on the rail looking down into the languid churning of the river

The turmoil of water below him, the pushing of that yellow current, might have been the Segre flowing sultily and languidly under a bristle of Spanish guns, or the Yalu, or the Nosat, or the Xingu Mike had leaned above them all, flown over them, waded some of them. They were all rivers, water going some place carrying the wealth of lands and the waste of humanity doggedly down to the uncaring sea.

And the air was merely air, buoyant enough to lift silver wings and carry a man to strange, far places, where the tumult and the hate, the passion and the pride of men made good copy Copy that brought slim green checks to one Mike Paull.

Not that money meant very much to Mike He owned nothing save a few clothes a membership in a club or two, a bagful of rusty, seldom used golf clubs and his typewriter. He wanted nothing. What money he did not spend—and he spent little, because spending did not interest him—went into the bank, stayed there. His home was a hotel room, any room, anywhere. He carried a framed picture of his mother who had died when he was fifteen

He could write and he knew it. He could make friends bluff officials, dodge bullets, play mediocre poker, lie his way gracefully out of tight places and speak a working minimum of half a dozen languages. He was so he told himself, a pretty decent guy. He should be satisfied with life He was free, twenty-nine years old, healthy and hard as nails. What ailed him? Why had he let a girl with gilt hair knock his complacensy askew, send him mooning and meandering here to stare down into the muddy Potomac?

He walked back slowly, caught a streetcar at the corner, went clattering uptown. He sat on the hard seat beside a man in patched dungarees who held a tin lunch box on his knees and stared out the window with the patient dullness, the bloodless face of the night worker.

"Cigarette, Buddy?" Mike held out his limp pack The man's face lighted briefly.

"Much obliged Can't smoke here I'll save it." The stranger dropped the cigarette into his shirt pocket.

"Where you working?" Mike asked

"Union Station Maintenance. Night shift Sweep out—keep hot water in the tanks—odd jobs."

"See a lot of things, don't you?"

"Yeah." The man was young, behind those tired eyes "I'm the man nobody sees The man with the broom. A lot of us in this town. We work around and we're alive, we can hear and see because the public never sees us. They look through us We're background like lamp posts They never see us

Rejects Request For Inquiry Into Montreal Police

MONTREAL, Jan 3 — (CP. — Chief Justice W.L. Bond in Superior Court here today dismissed as insufficiently specific a petition requesting a judicial inquiry into Montreal's police department and containing charges of "protection" of a $10,000,000 a year gambling and vice racket and other allegations.

Main features of the petition, presented Dec. 14 on behalf of 74 Montreal citizens, constituted, "a severe arraignment" of social conditions existing in the city, possibly calling for the intervention of the Attorney General of the Province. Mr. Justice Bond said in a written judgment.

MONTREAL, Jan. 3 — (CP) The petition for a judicial probe of the Montreal Police Department and vice conditions in the city, dismissed today in Superior Court by Chief Justice W.L. Bond, will be redrafted listing specific charges against certain police officials and other persons, it was learned tonight.

"But I have sought in vain throughout the document any specific charge against any name or by any indication of his office or functions, which would authorize me in virtue of the provisions of the act invoked to constitute a judicial inquiry under such undefined conditions," His Lordship added.

The petition alleged, among other things, that certain detectives had tolerated robberies of which they had foreknowledge and that some police officers were in league with bandits and plotted with them to share the profit of crime.

In an interview following the Superior Court ruling, Capt. Arthur Tache, head of Montreal's morality police squad, said that flying barbotte games and their operators and "bookies," who take bets on horse races are being kept "on the run" by alertness of his men.

Many sufferers who have tested out numerous liniments will agree that where something is needed to dislodge a deep-seated condition; few remedies compare with Nerviline. It's because Nerviline's soothing powers penetrate so deeply, because it has several times the strength of ordinary low-quality preparations, it has come to be known by many as King over pain. For Rheumatic conditions, muscular and joint stiffness, Nerviline works quickly and efficiently in bringing relief—a test will prove that its analgesic powers are very great. A trial usually proves Nerviline is a very efficient liniment; it does relieve many muscular pains in a short time. Get a 35c bottle from your dealer to-day.

MRS. W. B CHAMPION

The death occurred on Monday night November 12th, 1945, of Mrs. W. B. Champion, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Larkin of Summerside. The deceased, the former Helen Naomi Larkin, was at one time a valued employee of the Telephone Company, Summerside. Six years ago she married Mr. W. B. Champion, of Kensington where they resided and where she made many friends. In August of this year while her husband was overseas serving in Italy, Belgium, Holland and Germany, Mrs. Champion took ill and in October Pte. Champion was called home and brought his wife to the home of her parents where she was lovingly cared for by her mother and sisters. Last week a sudden change for the worse came and she gradually sank until the end came. Her death is deeply regretted by her many friends here and in Kensington, just when life held so much of promise.

There are left to mourn, her husband, two little sons, Lewis, four and Gary two; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Larkin; two sisters Mrs. Ray Pidgeon and Mrs. Frank MacEwen, both of Summerside; four brothers, Frederick T. of Somerville, Mass; J. Bertram of Ottawa, Arthur S. of Kensington; and David of the Postal Corps in Germany, to all of whom deepest sympathy is extended in their sorrow this being the first break in the family.

The service at the home of her parents on Thursday, Nov 15th, at 1.30 was couducted by the Rev. Mr. Carnegy in which he spoke comforting words to those bereaved. The hymn sung was The Lord's My Shepherd. In the Presbyterian Church at Kensington at 2.30 the service was conducted by Rev. Mr. McGowan assisted by Rev. Mr. Carnegy and Rev. Mr. Murray. The hymns sung were. Asleep In Jesus and Abide With Me. A quartette Above The Bright Blue was beautifully rendered by Mrs. McAdam, Mrs Ramsay, Messrs Philips and Semple. A solo was sung by Mr. Semple, Face to Face which was sung with much expression.

The pallbearers were Messrs. Freddie Davison, Chas Adams Ross MacEwen, Arthur Allen, Ferno Rogers and Jackie McInnis

In Memoriam

MR. SYLVESTER MONAGHAN

The residents of South Melville and adjoining communities were deeply grieved and shocked to learn of the passing away of Sylvester Monaghan on the evening of November 30th. He had been in failing health for the past year but it was not until the last two weeks that his condition assumed a serious aspect and despite the best of medical care and competent nursing he passed peacefully away, surrounded by his loving family and also his spiritual adviser Rev. L. J. Ayers who administered the last rites of the Catholic Church to which he had always been a faithful and devoted adherent. Deceased who had attained his 59th year, was of a quiet, kindly, genial, unassuming disposition and was always ready to extend hospitality to the many people both young and old who were sure to find a welcome at his home, a place in which he had spent his entire life. He was the youngest and last of a large family of brothers and sisters. He will be sadly missed by all his friends and neighbours but it is the bereaved family circle that will find the broken link hard to bear. However we must all submit to the Heavenly Decree and look forward to a blessed re-union in a happy eternity. He leaves a disconsolate widow, formerly Mary Power of Emerald and three sons, Gerald at home; Spr. George of the R. C. E., and William of Clyde River; also one daughter Mary at home. He also leaves a large number of nieces and nephews, Rev. Dr. W. E. Monaghan of Alberton, being one of the latter.

His funeral, which took place on Monday, December 3rd to St. Joseph's Church, Kelly's Cross, was largely attended. Requiem Mass being sung by Rev. Dr. Monaghan who also read the committal prayers at the grave, Rev. L. J. Ayers was present in the Sanctuary.

The pallbearers were: Francis Bradley, Peter Greenan, James D. Flood, Peter Toole, Emmet Gorman and John H. Trainor. Funeral arrangements were under direction of F. J. Trainor and Sons of Tyrone. ....May his soul rest in peace.

The following contributed Mass Cards and Messages of Sympathy.
