Spruce Beetle Causing Heavy Loss in Colorado

By ROBERT E. GEIGER
WASHINGTON, Nov. 8 — (CP) — Ten years ago a tiny creature took advantage of a great opportunity — and it cost the American people upwards of $200,000,000. It destroyed most of the trees on one of the most beautiful national forests and many trees on five other forests.

The creature was a hard-shelled beetle, one-quarter inch long, called the Engelmann spruce beetle.

It found its perfect opportunity in Colorado, among the stately spruce trees of White River National forest, where the rugged backbone of the Rocky Mountains juts two miles above sea level.

In June, 1939, winds strong enough to break the tops of hundreds of White River's spruces swept the forest.

There were a few beetles in the forest, good food for the woodpeckers and birds in the check. But this downed timber of Engelmann spruce was just what the beetles needed. They thrive and breed in recently-downed trees where they attack and kill living trees.

Forest service officials estimate the worst of the damaged spruce forests covered 5,000 square miles. Lesser damage extends all the way into Utah, several hundred miles away.

Experts estimate the tiny beetle has killed trees containing at least 4,000,000,000 board feet of lumber — enough to build 400,000 five-room frame houses. The standing trees that already have been killed were worth $8,000,000 and would have produced more than $200,000,000 worth of goods.

The beetle in six years caused 16 times more damage than did forest fires in the whole Rocky Mountain region in 30 years.

The Forest Service has interested business men in attempting to use the downed timber for paper pulp.

Medicine & Dentistry Expensive Courses

OTTAWA, Nov. 8 — (CP) — An exhaustive survey by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics showed today that medicine and dentistry are the most expensive university courses.

Purely aside from the longer periods of study, higher tuition fees and more expensive books and equipment make the year-by-year costs of the two courses highest in the report said.

The Bureau took the survey with the assistance of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. Costs were based on the 1947-48 academic year. It found costs ranged from $818 for a year at the least-expensive university for the average woman student in arts—to $1,555 for a year at the most expensive medical school.

The findings were based on questionnaires, asking complete details on the cost of a university education, including tuition and other university fees, board and lodging, recreation, clothing and laundry and medical and dental expenses.

The average costs of a year of medical school ranged from a low of $1,071 to $1,555, with tuition fees ranging from $252 to $426. For dental students, costs averaged between $1,264 and $1,500, with fees roughly from $10 to $180 more expensive than in arts.

For male students in arts and science, costs ran from $892 to $1,247. In 100 of the 18 universities polled, the average year cost now than $1,000. For women students, the same courses meant an outlay of from $816 to $1,103 and at only four universities did the average year cost more than $1,000.
