SEARCHLIGHTS AT SEA.

The Bureau of Navigation of the United States Government is studying the question of searchlights on steamers and may recommend that a law be passed compelling every vessel with an American passenger certificate to carry a searchlight, remarking an exchange. Two of the larger steamships are already provided with them. The Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, of the Hamburg-American line, arrived in New York on Sunday equipped with a searchlight that was tried on the voyage, being turned on the Scotland lightship at a distance of about five miles, and the name could be read quite easily. The Ancona, of the Italian line, also is equipped with a searchlight fixed on the starboard bow at the spot where the lookout man stands in foggy weather. Most shippers are not inclined to view the innovation with favor, according to information received by Mr. Chamberlain, commissioner of navigation in the Department of Commerce and Labor, at Washington, who had Collector Loeb, of the port of New York, make enquiries among the captains of the big Atlantic liners. Thirty captains of American, British, Dutch, French, German, Italian and Russian vessels were interviewed and their replies sent to Washington to be attached to the Government report on the searchlight question. Most of the captains thought the lights might be useful in picking up boats, buoys, or navigating narrow waterways, but they all agreed that the indiscriminate use of searchlights would be a menace to navigation, declaring that the glare would have a blinding effect on those behind it, as well as the persons on the ship the light was shining on. A searchlight always lit would be a serious danger to navigation, the captains said. Furthermore, in foggy or misty weather or in the ice regions it would be useless because of the atmospheric conditions. Much of the agitation for searchlights developed from the belief that they would be useful in locating ice-bergs, which are often accompanied by fog or mist. According to the captains interviewed, this is a mistake. At the same time the searchlight ought to be useful as an aid to a ship's officers in more clearly distinguishing an object already sighted by means of glasses. The Kaiserin Auguste Victoria's experiment of reading the name of a lightship five miles away would seem to prove this. It is natural that the skippers should doubt the great usefulness of the light. An innovation or reform is nearly always opposed, especially by the persons directly interested. But if the searchlight adds at all to the safety of people at sea they are deserving of a place on steamships carrying passen-

THE END IN SIGHT.

It really looks now as if the backbone of the Orozco Rebellion in Mexico has been broken. Out-generalled and out-numbered by the Government forces and suffering from lack of ammunition, funds and equipment, the insurgent leader has been driven to the mountains where his followers are carrying on a guerrilla warfare of which the end cannot be far distant. General Orozco has never been able to rally since the crushing defeat administered by the federals some four weeks ago. He has done some desperate manoeuvring, but all his manoeuvres have been backward and on the defensive, and desertions from his standard have followed as a normal consequence. It was on June 1, when Gonzalez C. Enrile, his financial agent, gave up the struggle and fled wounded and bleeding from Chihuahua to El Paso, where he was taken in charge by the Texas Rangers that the desperate state of Orozco's fortunes was first made fully apparent. Orozco himself is now in full retreat towards Juarez and it is said that many of his officers not content with his rate of speed have disguised themselves as civilians and have hurried on before him. Some are seeking cover on the American side of the border. It is clear, says an exchange, that this most unjustifiable and ill-starred rebellion, which has done the country incalculable harm, is in its final stages. It is to be hoped that Mexico with its magnificent resources will soon be able to assume the career of prosperity which it enjoyed during the long regime of President Diaz.

itude, so changing the aspect of the struggle in the East as Roberts had changed it at Paardeburg in the West. There was no seeking to minimize the credit due to General White and his men, and the honors paid him by the Government met all men's approval. He was in truth a worthy soldier.—Montreal Gazette.

NECROLOGY.

The death of Joseph McCormack occurred at his home in Little Pond, Wednesday, June 26th, in his 26th year. Deceased, who had been in failing health for the past year, bore his sufferings with a true Christian spirit and endeared himself to all who knew him. He was consoled by frequent visits from his parish priest from whom he received the last rites of the church. Death in this case claimed for its own a man of many sterling qualities, honest, upright and sincere in all his dealings and whose conduct and character on all occasions have been unapproachable. The many beautiful tokens of respect showed the high esteem in which he was held. A large concourse of sympathizing friends and relatives followed his remains to St. Frances De Sales Church, where a high mass of requiem was celebrated by Rev. Dr. Walker. P. P. thence to the cemetery where all that was mortal of a kind and loving brother was laid to rest beside his father and mother, who predeceased him. The pall-bearers were Vincent McDonald, Alfred McDonald, Gamalean McDonald, Joseph McDonald, Allen McKensie and Robert Jenkins. He leaves to mourn three brothers, Allan and Patrick at home and Daniel in Boston. Also three sisters Mary C. and Sarah M. at home and Nonewa in Newton, Mass. May his soul which animated his body in this world find sweet rest in Heaven. (Boston papers please copy.)

NOTES.

The packers will dissolve their trust, but what the people want is that prices should dissolve.—Philadelphia Record Herald.

Field Marshal Sir George Stuart White, whose death occurred yesterday, filled a big place in the news of the early months of the South African War. He was in command of the forces that were gathered at Ladysmith when hostilities began, and which had for months to bear the brunt of the Boer attack directed against Natal. Though relief was long delayed and he and the garrison knew of the repeated failure of Buller's army, only eleven miles away, to break through the Boer lines, he held out with a daily diminishing strength, till, almost when the effort could no longer be kept up, Buller did drive his men over the Tugela and through the mountains and compelled the Boers to assume a defensive attitude.
