GREATER BRITAIN AND THE KING'S FUNERAL.

The Standard of Empire points a number of letters from Canadian and other correspondents complaining that the Oversea Dominions were scarcely recognized at all in connection with the funeral of King Edward. One of these correspondents mentions that every little foreign state and every foreign service, the British army and navy were represented, but Premiers, Ministers and high officials from the Greater Britain beyond the sea were left altogether out of account, although many of them had come from great distances.

It is true, however, that by special direction of King George, and in defiance of old-time precedents, a coach and a place in the procession was provided for the three High Commissioners representing Canada, Australia and South Africa. Beyond that, there has been much misunderstanding, growing out of the fact that royal funerals still follow the precedents set in long past ages and are by no means of a representative character. Now that attention has been strenuously called to the fact, a change will probably be brought about in the future.

We have spoken of how some colonial correspondents felt in regard to this matter. But the absence of the representatives of the Oversea Dominions was only one feature. The British Premier, his Ministers and the Leader of the Opposition in the United Kingdom were quite as much ignored. "Where was the Prime Minister?" asks London Public Opinion in dealing with the unrepresentative character of the funeral. True, Mr. Asquith was there, but only as a private individual, as were his colleagues.

In a royal funeral the members of other royal families, the army, the navy and the royal household are always represented. But the machinery by which the Kingdom and the Empire are governed, and have for a century been governed, is of more recent development than the traditional royal funeral. Accordingly the Cabinet and the House of Parliament have no place in the order. "If a Minister, a Peer, or a member of Parliament was there," says the London Post, "it was not because he is a Minister, or a Peer or a member of Parliament, but because of some other office which he holds."

"We could scarcely explain to Mr. Roosevelt," the Post goes on to say, "why the head of the Executive Government took no part in the obsequies of his Sovereign. It would be equally difficult to explain the absence of His Majesty's Ministers from the procession." The Westminster Gazette also remarks upon the official list of those taking part in the ceremonial: "It contains hundreds of names, but we look through it in vain for the names of the Prime Minister or any other Cabinet Minister or ex-Minister, with the exception of Lord Rosebery, who was there as a Royal Archer, and the First Lord of the Admiralty, who walked in the procession not as Minister but as President of the Board of Admirals."

When these facts become known in the Oversea Dominions there will hardly be any further complaint in regard to officially prominent Canadians or Australians who were not assigned a place in the King's funeral procession. For the most prominent men of Great Britain were treated in precisely the same way, and all because of the traditional mediæval character of the ceremony.

THE LATE REV. G. R. WHITE.

The very sudden demise of Rev. G. R. White, late pastor of the Baptist Church in this city, has removed one who for years past has been most active and useful in religious and moral work. He was an able and earnest minister of the Gospel, and was specially endowed with that broad and liberal spirit which enabled him to fraternize with all other workers in the Christian field. He shared his pulpit freely with the ministers of other religious bodies and was quite at home in any of the many churches to which he was from time to time invited.

Every good cause, every benevolent or patriotic object, found in him an earnest advocate and supporter. Especially was this true of the agencies to secure the better observance of the Sabbath and the promotion of temperance. His watchword was duty. His charity was broad. He sought for and found the best that was in every man. More persons than perhaps he knew of regarded him with very high esteem and affection. His sudden demise is a great loss not only to the Baptist body but to the church universal. He had fought a good fight; he had done his duty, and the sudden call was but a swift and kindly transition from his toil to his reward.

"Not once nor twice in our fair land story
The path of duty was the way to glory.
He, that ever followed her commands,
On with toil of heart and knees and hands,
Through the long gorge to the far light has won
His path upward and prevailed,
Shall find the topping crags of Duty scaled
Are close upon the shining table lands
To which our God Himself is moon and sun,
Such was he: His work is done."

SOME RECURRING TROUBLES.

A correspondent writing from the western section of the Province asks The Guardian to refer to the non-observance of the Domestic Animals Act (when it is in force in a district) which he states is neglected by some who voted to have it put in force. The difficulty is not new, nor is it confined to any section of this Province.

An owner whose live stock is allowed by him to trespass upon his neighbor's crops or property is himself a trespasser. Such things are fruitful causes of trouble and litigation in many communities, and call for better education in regard to the obvious duties of good citizenship. A man of peace is usually unwilling to impound his neighbor's cattle, or poultry, but is also reluctant to have his crops destroyed.

Another form of public trespass is far too common in this Province—that of crowding the road fence into the limits of the public highway. This is sometimes done by owners from whom more regard for public rights might be expected. Healthy public sentiment will, we trust, in time isolate and reduce the number of these two classes of trespassers, who seem willing to break the law of the land so long as they are allowed to do so with impunity.

INDIAN NAMES ON THE I. R. C.

When the New Brunswick Government was building the European and North American Railway from St. John to Shediac, now a part of the Intercolonial, the interesting notion prevailed that it would be worth while to perpetuate in the names of the railway stations the old Indian names of some points along the line. The late Moses H. Perley, who was well versed in Indian lore, was called upon to supply the names, and he did so. In some cases the translation of the Indian name was given, as at Moosepath, near St. John. Further east were Quispam, meaning Lake, Quispamsis, Little Lake, Nanwigewauk, Ossekeag and Passeskeag, now of doubtful meaning. Apohaqui (Moose Horn), Plumweseep (Swamp), Penobscis (Stone's Place) Anaganee (Portage), and so on. Not all the Indian names have been retained, however. Ossekeag has been changed to Hampton. Petitcodiac is an Indian name modified by the early French settlers, and means River with a Bend, referring to the elbow at Moncton. Indian place names are otherwise quite common in New Brunswick and in the State of Maine.

The last general provincial elections in Ontario and Quebec were held in June, 1908; in Nova Scotia in June, 1906; in New Brunswick in March, 1908; in Manitoba in March, 1907; in British Columbia in February, 1907; in Prince Edward Island, November, 1908; in Alberta, November 1908 and in Saskatchewan in August 1908. Alberta is to have a general election shortly, with polling on June 29. The Manitoba election is announced for July 29 and a general election in Nova Scotia is also due this year.

The late Dr. Goldwin Smith was one of the most eminent men who have made Canada their home. He had been in the Old Country a close friend of Gladstone, of Tennyson and of our late King when he was Prince of Wales, and from him Dr. Smith received a sympathetic message but a short time before His Majesty died. Dr. Smith was a man of signal ability and refinement, kindly, charitable and possessed of wealth. He was greatly admired and revered in Toronto where his home, The Grange, was a sort of Mecca for itinerary men; He had doubts, however, as to some of the most cherished doctrines of the Christian faith in regard to the life to come, which lent a tinge of melancholy to his last suffering days:
