MEN and WOMEN WANTED FOR AIRCRAFT INDUSTRY
 NO EXPERIENCE REQUIRED

Courses free: Living allowances cover all expenses.

Under the War Emergency Training Program a number of young men and women between 18 and 25 years of age, with suitable qualifications, will be selected for special training for an Aircraft Overhaul Plant in Nova Scotia. We believe this special training is the finest obtainable as it is of a particularly diversified nature, and we recommend it to any one planning a future in the Aircraft industry.

No application will be considered from those now employed at war work or who are at present eligible for military service.

For full particulars apply at:
 Summerside—National Selective Service Office—Tuesday, August 31st at 9 A. M. and 2 P. M.
 Charlottetown—National Selective Service Office—Wednesday, September 1st at 9 A. M. and 2 P. M.

Standard Beef Cutting Compulsory
W. C. T. U. NOTES

Sweeping revisions in the orders affecting beef pricing, which is effective on Monday next, August 30, have been announced by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

"So far as the purchase of beef to the general public of Prince Edward Island is concerned, the new order has two general objectives, Mr. W. R. MacNeill, meat ration officer states. "These are: First, to ensure that any decline in wholesale prices will be reflected in correspondingly lower prices to the consumer; second, to provide a rationing system of cutting and pricing for retailers whereby consumers will know from week to week the highest price per pound that may be charged for the desired standard cut of any quality of beef.

"This system of cutting and pricing has been in effect in a number of cities in Canada for the past several months and now is extended to all sections of Canada except remote areas. "From now on it is absolutely necessary that all dealers in this province follow the standard system of cutting and pricing," the meat ration officer emphasizes.

"All consumers are urged to insure that their purchases of beef be in accordance with the pricing and cutting charts which will by law have to be displayed in prominent place in every retail meat market in the province," said Mr. MacNeill.

The order makes no change whatever in the government policy previously announced, respecting maximum wholesale beef prices and floor prices.

The Board emphasizes that the regulations contained in the order were not the result of a consultation with an advisory committee from the retail beef trade.

Montague

Mrs. Cecil Wightman, and son Arnold Sydney Mines are summering at their cottage, the Montague River. The Wightman family, who formerly lived at Montague, and who still take a most helpful interest in all our doings always receive a particular welcome to the town. They leave on return to Sydney Mines about September 5th.

Mr. Carr of Sydney Mines, was a recent visitor to Montague while he was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Montague Anner.

Miss Frances Cowan of Montague is visiting her friend, Alberta Gaudin of Summerside.

Cpl. and Mrs. Keyes and little daughter Margaret, who were visiting at Kensington recently returned to their home at Montague.

The regular monthly meeting of the Lower Montague Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. David Wright on Wednesday evening, August 18th with a goodly number of members and visitors present. Miss Elizabeth McEwen, being guest of honor, and the vice president, Mrs. V. O. Schirmer, presided. The treasurer's report showed a generous sum of money on hand. It was decided at this meeting to give the Kings County Hospital a donation of $25.

The members of this organization are to be heartily congratulated on their excellent work. Before the meeting was brought to a close, one of the members, Mrs. Geo. Beck, who recently moved to Montague, was presented with a gift, and a suitable gift. Mrs. Beck was one of the charter members and the first secretary-treasurer of this Institute, which was organized in 1922, and has ever since taken active part in all the activities of the society and needless to say she will be greatly missed in the settlement. The address was read by the secretary, Mrs. Robert Machon and the gift presented by Mrs. Geo. Anner, you know W. C. T. U. year will be upon us—filled with a credible suffering in conquered countries. What can we do? The second word in the name of our organization is "carry on." Had the world not been so in a state of terrible chaos, we in Canada, as the Home is, so in the Nation. We can never legislate people into being good—we must educate.

Mr. and Mrs. R. K. Clements were visitors to Summerside, N. B. on Tuesday they were accompanied by the trip by Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Poole and Miss Jean Poole of Lower Montague.

At Lower Montague recently, Cpl. and Mrs. Ralph Graham were tendered a miscellaneous shower, receiving the usual and delightful gifts. Cpl. and Mrs. Graham were married some time ago at Halifax, N. S. this being their first visit to Lower Montague since their marriage, the community took opportunity to honour them. Cpl. Graham immediately after returned to his duties at Halifax. Mrs. Graham, who is a daughter of the late Mrs. Wm. Edmonds of Lower Montague is remaining with her mother indefinitely.

Miss Dorothy MacDonald and Miss Joan Ryan of Mulgrave, N. S. were recent visitors to Lower Montague guests of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Poole. Miss MacDonald is a grand daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archie Reynolds, who formerly lived at Sturgeon, P. E. I.

CROP REPORT

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 27. — Temperatures have been moderate during the day but the nights have continued cool, according to the weekly crop report of the Department of Agriculture, Harvesting in the Canadian National Railways. Some light frosts are reported from Saskatchewan, but from districts where no damage to field crops is expected.

Showers have fallen at scattered points and hail storms are reported to have done considerable damage in some areas. Harvesting is in full swing throughout southern and central areas of the three provinces and threshing operations are daily extending to new areas. Saw fly infestation is heavy in many regions and much of the wheat fields affected is being swathed instead of being left straight combining. All grain

Agreement Reached At Quebec On Victory Plan

QUEBEC — Plans for continued prosecution of the war have been concluded at the Quebec Anglo-U.S. conference and another meeting will probably be held here at the end of the year. President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Prime Minister Winston Churchill, seated on both sides of their host, Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King, discussed the progress of the war before the leading newsmen and cameramen of the United States at a press conference on the terrace of Quebec's Citadel. Pictured here are the three leaders of the conference. (National Film Board Photo.)

CHAPTER VIX

What Aaron Roth wanted, and what he no longer had, was small, solid business; a business which would provide a steady, comfortable income and yet not demand an undue amount of his attention.

He thought sadly of the pre-war days when he had been able to make a comfortable living as a member of the staff of a large, well-known, easy manner, with which he conducted his affairs in the placid days.

Now all that was changed. All about him was the constant clatter and brusque movement of a great city. Typewriters clicked ceaselessly outside his office. Bristle brushes and pens were being used in his hands and on his lips.

Roth did not trust the swift pace of his business. He felt that the tempo of these days, would end with them.

But he knew that he must move with the times or he would be left behind. He had noted the collapse of several old-fashioned firms in business since his complete will could no longer exist. It was all or nothing now.

delighted with it, and many times she would look over her shoulder at the girl framed mirror across the room and study herself as she talked on the phone. "Yes, this is I. This is the mirror became something to live up to, a perfected form of herself that she must not disappoint.

At thirty-one, Emily was general manager for Aaron Roth and merchandising and sales. She was making one hundred and twenty-five dollars a week. Because her moods were unpredictable, Emily was not liked at Roth's. But she was highly regarded in the trade. She'd had three offers to join rival companies. She would not consider leaving, however. Now, since Miss Kendrick, Les Fairman and Veronica Riley were gone, she was the oldest, as well as the most important employee in the company.

Sitting in her office, regarding the telephone, for which she wished she could find more use. Emily looked much younger than her years. Though there was a tauness about her manner, and her face was acquiring a set, determined aspect, one would have judged her to be no more than twenty-five. There were no lines in her face and her skin was as acutely lovely as ever. It was not a pretty face—but too kind for that—but it was clearly featured and alert.

She carried herself beautifully, directly and moved with a swift ease. Unlike many tall women, she did not try to make herself seem smaller. After some thought, she had bobbed her hair and worn it for a few months in a thick marcel. Now it was cut into a shape called Egyptian, but it was actually a Dutch bob, parted in the middle, with bangs. She rose from her desk and went to the mirror, studying her bob, glad that she had finally dared to have it.

Her telephone rang and she went back to the desk. "It's Miss Haley," said Katie Lyman, the switchboard girl.

Miss Haley talked lightly of nothing for a moment. When she identified herself as a buyer for a department store and said, "I've heard about some of the very interesting things you're doing at Roth's," Emily thought that she was going to be offered a job. But Miss Haley had not called for that reason. "And we have most of the bright girls in the city," Miss Haley went on. "I'm sure you'll find the group interesting. Anyway, I'd like very much to have you come to the meeting Wednesday. Shall you be free?"

"Wednesday?" Emily paused long enough so that Miss Haley could imagine her checking a date book. "Yes, Wednesday's fine."

"Good," Miss Haley said. She named a smart little hotel off Park Avenue. "I'll meet you in the lobby. You'll know me by my laughing Irish eyes."

Emily did not care for business women's clubs, for though she was one herself, she was inclined to think of business women as a frumpish, frustrated sort. But she told herself that there was no polite way out of the appointment and anyway, she reasoned, she would have to go only once, and at that, she might pick up some information or ideas that could be used at Roth's.

Despite her feelings, Emily dressed with care that Wednesday morning, selecting a yellow and brown dress. At noon she told Miss Appleby, "If anyone calls I'll be back shortly after two. I think."

At the hotel Emily stood just inside the door, waiting to smile and be afraid that Miss Haley might not approve. Emily looked about her and seeing no one who might be Miss Haley, she went to a lounge and opened a newspaper. But she was not interested in it, and she studied the well dressed people standing about. She noticed a group of four women, young and chic. Even as she looked, a woman disentangled herself from the group and came up to Emily. "Miss Ellis," she asked, "you are Karin Ellis?"

"Yes," "I'm Frances Haley," the woman said. "It's awfully good of you to come."

"It's good of you to ask me," Emily replied. "If anyone calls, you are Karin Ellis?"

"She rose, and she and Miss Haley regarded each other critically for a moment. Smiles of mutual approval came on their faces. Miss Haley was young, no older than Emily, short, dark and trim in tailored black with crisp, white accents. Though there was no familiarity in their appearance, Emily and Frances Haley were of the rise. Emily felt this bond immediately. And it rather amazed her, for she had come to think of herself as unique.

When Miss Haley took her over to meet the others she was further astonished. They were all so gay and young and alive. Miss Miller, the red-haired one in the leopard skin coat, took Emily's hand and said, "Of course! Karin Ellis." The queen of the cosmetic industry!

"Hardly that," Emily replied. She smiled, accepted a cigarette from Miss Hamilton and was immediately at ease. They chatted until more women came to join them and then entered the orchid banquet room. It was filled with smoke and perfume and the voices of a happy, active group, no less happy for absence of men.
