HER CONQUERING FAITH

It Overcame the Scheming of a Selfish Sister.

By ARABELLA NASMYTH. (Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.)

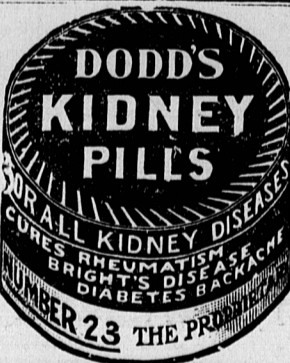

The indisputable fact which has so often sadly surprised people that two and two will not make five was staring the Anselm girls in the face.

It was a year after the death of their father, and many evasions and putting off of the fatal day had gone for naught. They were face to face with the knowledge that they could no longer afford to keep up the old family home and, moreover, must do something to add to their infinitesimal income.

"In some way," said Regina, looking up rather wearily from her pencil and paper—"in some way we've got to have money. We've got to go to work."

Regina was twenty-six, with rebellious dark hair and a firm chin which always amazed people by the dimple they discovered in it. Regina was the one who always did things in the family. Nobody had ever taken time to call her a beauty, so she had never quite realized the fact that she came very close to being one and could devote her leisure to accomplish results.

Of course with Esther it was different. From the time her first fluff of golden hair had made itself manifest and her big blue eyes had first glanced appealingly at humanity it had been decided that Esther was a beauty, and the decision had clung to her through

THE PEOPLE'S THEATRE.

The new pictures for tonight are grand cavalry troops—the bold Cromwell—The Dynamite Waistcoat, a well, the daring daughter and the funny comedy, clean cut and amusing. Outcast on Heroine, a story in which a quaker spy plays an important part—a story in which a girl made an out-cast proves herself the bravest of the Brave.

The grand historic story of the Days of Oliver Cornwall will be shown tonight finally. This is one of Pathe's masterpieces, the grandest historic interpretation ever featured on canvas. Don't miss seeing the life, though at maturity it is doubtful she never could expect. The world if she would have been thought more, the shallowness, that were less than an ordinarily good looking fresh sister's were forcing themselves on her young girl had not those around her recognition against her will.

But as a beauty Esther had always ent mold their situation would even been waited on and put forward, and now be vastly improved. Encourage even when time went on and girlish ment and energy at her elbow would petulance and fickleness and caprice have given Regina the strength of ten.

"Work!" she said. "You are ridiculous! It's all very well for you to talk, but how could I work? What could I do? Regina?"

She hesitated a little, for there was something in the straight browsed face meditatively surveying her as though she were seen for the first time that bid her pause. "Regina—if you would —it would be very easy for you to place both of us beyond all money cares forever. I'm sure."

The voice died away before the sparkle of anger in the dark face across the table. Regina bit her lip before she spoke in a repressed voice. "I won't pretend to misunderstand you," she said. "It's like you to propose of feeling something else than yourself! Understand once for all that I'll never marry Dr. Brightlight! He is selfish, he has a cruel and vindictive nature with all his surface and polish, and he is sixty years old."

"Also he owns the most magnificent country place in the state and is a millionaire," breathed Esther as her sister stopped. "Really, Regina, for a grownup person you are distressingly silly! I'm sure Dr. Brightlight is no worse than lots of men, and think what you'd have!"

"Which you, of course, would share," said Regina coldly. Her face took on an immobile expression as she looked down at her sister. "Understand, I'll never marry him. I'll find work to do."

"It's Neal Maxwell!" the older girl flashed angrily. "You'd be glad of the chance if you weren't eating your heart out for a man who threw you over and never cared anything for you! You!"

But Regina had swept from the room, her head in the air, her hand clutching mechanically the papers covered with their rows of discouraging figures.

She was hurt as only a proud person can be hurt, and the sure knowledge deep in her heart that Neal Maxwell had indeed, beyond all doubt, cared for her, in spite of the opinion voiced by her sister and shared, as Regina knew, by nearly all her acquaintance in the town, did not help much in bearing the taunt.

It was a year since Neal had gone abroad as foreign representative for his firm and eleven months since his letters had stopped abruptly, without warning. Her two letters of inquiry bringing no response, pride had stepped in and she had made no further effort to hear from him beyond learning from his firm he was alive and well.

And when he left they had been engaged. She could hardly remember when she and Neal had not intended to marry one another, so many had been the years of their more than friendship. In spite of her indignation and her secret grief, Regina still clung to the feeling that, wherever he was, whatever had happened, Neal still must care for her just as day must follow night.

And she was of too strong a nature to seek to cover her blighting by accepting the man who had haunted her footsteps for the past year, Dr. Brightlight, whom she instinctively disliked and steadily shunned, to the furious exasperation of Esther. This had not been the first difference they had had upon the subject.

This night she was tired, very tired, and discouraged. Sympathy, understanding or help from Esther she felt to buy is unnappily not for sale." "Tell me what you wish?" she responded. "Oh, no; I dare not declare my wishes." "Nevertheless let me know what you wish to buy," persisted the fair saleswoman. "Well, then, since you demand it, I should like a ringlet of your glossy black hair." She manifested no embarrassment at the bold request, but with a pair of scissors immediately clipped off one of her beautiful locks and handed it to the astonished youth, remarking that the price was only 500 francs.

Her audacious admirer was thunder-struck with the demand, but dared not demur, as by this time a group had collected and were listening to the conversation. So he took the hair, paid over the money and left the hall.
