RAINBOW A-BACK NUMBER

"The rainbow isn't in it now with the socks worn by men," said, Le-tween stations, an elevated railroad guard to his neighbor on the platform and he continued—
"Just glance in there, will you, and let your eye range along at the men's feet. Purple, green, yellow, blue, red, grey, pink and black socks, and socks of one color with spots of another and socks with stripes in ten and crosses and socks of various colors mixed, and I'll bet with all those colors that knock back out of the rainbow you see that one pair there with no color in 'em plainest of all? Sure, it's that pair of white socks, the only pair in the car; and you might travel here day after day and not see another pair.
"They tell me and I can just remember a little of it myself, that there was a time when men didn't wear anything but white socks. White socks, and maybe some grey, and then they came to black, but who'd have thought they'd ever come to this? I tell you—and he broke off to yell "Empty-ump stree—t Empty-ump stree—t!"

"The rainbow's a back number now," he added—New York "Sun."

THE ROSARY

When Edward E. Rose's new play, "The Rosary," with John Meehan in the role of Father Kelly, comes to the Opera House, city, tonight, Tuesday, Oct. 24th locals theatre-goers will have an opportunity to see pictured before them the growing unrest and irreligion of our times. It is a beautiful picture of the misery and happiness that surely comes upon a man who lacks faith in the supreme good and its triumphs in our world.
Can one evil mind poison a whole household. Is the human brain capable of producing disastrous effects upon a household by adverse suggestive thoughts?
Do we realize adequately how our mental attitudes influence our lives and the lives about us?
And the answer? Well—the play is the answer.
The Rosary has proven to be the sensation of the past year in Chicago and New York;—one company played for almost four months in Chicago alone and the engagement in New York, in fact, in all the large cities was equally as successful.
Seats on sale in advance at the usual places.

USE OF POUITICES.

Poultices or cataplasms are among the most useful remedies we can have recourse to for certain purposes, but their use is greatly abused and they often do more harm than good, and ignorance in applying them, writes a well known veterinarian.
Nothing is more soothing and causes more relief to a bruised or contused part than a hot poultice, nothing brings a rising abscess to a head; nothing cleans a foul or dirty wound quicker and better than a well-applied poultice, but the continual use of hot poultices to wounds, with the idea that they are going to heal them, is the greatest mistake on earth. Continual hot poultices to a wound soften, weaken and disorganize the parts to such an extent that vitality is lost and the healing process retarded or completely stopped, so that re-vascularization is impossible; the parts are parboiled, in fact, to put it in plain words, decompose and slough. Wounds in the neighborhood of joints simple in character, are often made into great chasms, and ending in open joint, simply from the continued use of poultices. They are, however, as stated, most useful when used with discretion, and very often absolutely necessary. For the horse, nothing answers better than linseed (flaxseed) meal, fresh and sweet, made nice and soft and applied comfortably hot. Half linseed meal and half sweet, coarse wheat bran also make a good poultice, as does the bran by itself. They should be prepared and changed every three or four hours in order to produce the best results. Poultices when applied to parts that are much inflamed and painful, are sometimes medicated with opium, poppy heads, belladonna, etc., and vaseline, or sweet oil is applied to the part first, to prevent sticking, but this latter is unnecessary and better left alone if the poultices are carefully removed and reapplied often, as they should be. It requires tact and common sense to apply a poultice well and so that it will stay on.—Horse Shoers' Journal.

THE LITTLE FELLER.

They ain't much to a baby, till it gets to know yer face
An' pesters till you take an' lug it round th' place,
An' grapples at yer whiskers with pudgy wudgy hands,
An' sez a lot o' gurgles its mother understands,
The time a grand-dad's gladness and tickleness begins
Is when th' little feller looks up at him an' grins.

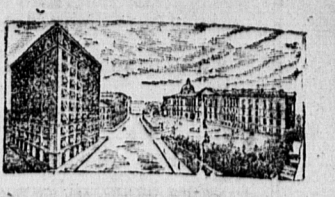

It's jest like recognoition—ye see th' dim supprise
Come risin' out o' somehwere's into th' rascal's eyes,
An' they begin to twinkle—a twinkle that spreads out.
An' you want to shout,
Fer then there's shakin' o' laughter in all his double chins—
That's when th' little feller looks up at you an' grins.

His grin shows that he knows ye and trusts ye as a friend—
A baby ain't growed up an' never can pretend!
His eyes has honest twinkles an' you somehow know they start
From 'way down th' goodness that's beating in his heart.
It's confidence he gives you without no outs an' ins.
When he begins to dimple an' looks at you an' grins.

They ain't much to a baby, but in its grin you know
Yur's ezin' lots o' sunshine you lost long time ago,
It makes you feel religious—a baby's heart is clean.
An' when it gives its favor its purpose isn't mean—
You think th' Lord forgiven a hull lot o' yer sins.
When that fat little feller looks up at you an' grins.
