Summer Ermine

By HEDDA HOYT

Fashion Editor of The United Press
(Written for The United Press)

NEW YORK, N. Y., Aug. 14.—A portly man, with fat hands fastened to the steering wheel of a yellow touring car, accosted us on the road of Roslyn, Long Island. Perhaps it was our vacation gingham which marked us as probable villagers.

"Do you know anyone who has any cats they want to get rid of?" I thought of the stray kitten I had rescued from the streets and left in the care of the apartment janitor. Perhaps this man offered a home for him.

"What do you want cats for?" I asked.

"We dye 'em up into fur. Trim coats and things. Pay you a dollar a head for full grown ones and 50 cents for half-grown," he replied blantly.

I vowed then and there that I would start a crusade against the use of household tabbies for personal adornment. Somehow it doesn't seem entirely barbarous to use the pelts of untamed animals of the woods to shield one from the winter's cold. But when it comes to skinning pet kittens to make summer sports collars, it's time to draw the line.

"Summer Ermine"

That night the keeper of the park complained that the mother of four kittens had disappeared. Gone—to make "summer ermine." The four walling kittens would have doubtless made a better ermine substitute, as their fur was short and soft. But the mother instinct of the old cat had told her to hide her young from just such beings as the man with the yellow touring car. And they are safe—or will be until starvation overtakes them.

If women are slaves to fashion—animals are victims of fashion. The average woman exacts a toll of thousands of lives for her yearly wardrobe. Her stockings alone cost thousands of silk-worms an early demise. Her shoes have been taken out of some young calf's hide. Silk frocks, undergarments, gloves, etc., all represent their HOTEL MOVABLES SOLD. The auction of movable property at the Brunswick, Kensington, on Tuesday was attended by a large number of interested persons. Bidding was brisk and the prices realized were moderate. Mr. and Mrs. Lynds will be keenly missed in Kensington. By persistent and unremitting industry they established and maintained a fine property in Kensington and attracted a large and lucrative patronage.

MUCH TRAVELLED VISITOR. Nursing Sister Lillian Pidgeon, has spent a short holiday with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Pidgeon, Kensington. She saw service in France during the war and had some experiences that would test the courage even of brave men. They followed the movements of troops as closely as they were permitted, sometimes finding themselves in the firing line. Their duty was to render first aid. But they never faltered. Will posterity remember this? She left on Wednesday morning for the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal where she has charge of the X-Ray apparatus. Her many friends wish her continued success. Y.

AMONG THE FOXES. Mr. William E. Harrington, architect and builder, Kensington, has just completed one of the finest Fox Ranches in the Province. This ranch, built for Mr. J. M. Leard, Kensington, has all the choice features to be found in the very best yet built, as well as many other features of original design. It is situated in the vicinity of Kensington, and the location is calculated to take advantage of all the natural auxiliaries that contribute to making ranching phenomenal success. Prospective ranchers would do well to inspect this institution before evolving plans for construction. It may be conceived that the fox industry is now rampant and that the profits therefrom may be handsomely augmented by taking advantage of all the most modern improvements that have, thus far, been developed. No where has fox farming been so systematically developed as in this province and ranchers have the present advanced condition to guide them in the march towards perfection. Mr. Leard has also an extensive ranch in Kelvin which has proved a success. Another ranch that your correspondent was permitted to see is that of Mr. Joseph Saunders, Irishtown, where may be seen some perfect beauties. In fact the fur appeared so choice that its very appearance must later melt the very heart of frigid winter. It seems that the industry is now well on the ascendant road and that the pinnacle of ultimate financial opulence is plainly in prospect. Y.

DOG FISHERY ON GREAT SLAVE LAKE

SASKATOON, Sask., Aug. 14.—The inhabitants of the far northern territories follow varied occupations, but it has been left to S. S. Marshall, formerly a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to inaugurate a new industry on the shores of Great Slave Lake. He will open a fishery, but unlike the average one, it will be established for the benefit of dogs. It will not be the mongrel canine of the trading posts nor of the northern Indian tribes, but for the highly prized and valuable Royal Canadian Mounted Police dogs that carry members of the "northern patrol" during their arduous work among the Indians and Eskimos of the Mackenzie river country. The fishery will supply food from the dogs, and Mr. Marshall also intends to open a trading station where he will deal in furs with the Indians who hunt and trap around the lake shores.

This unique fishery will be established at Sulphur Bay, on the northwest shore of Great Slave Lake—a paradise for hunters and trappers. The sulphur springs which empty into the lake at this point kill much of the fish which is washed ashore where it is sought by fox, bear and other forest animals.

Mr. Marshall a veteran of the far northern regions who claims to have been able to make the trip on snowshoes from Dawson to Fairbanks, Alaska, while a member of the Mounted Police, twenty years ago, has spent the past two years among the Indians and Eskimos of the Northwest territories. When he left the "outside" two years ago he journeyed via Edmonton to Fort Norman and then by boat through Lake Athabaska to Great Slave Lake. There he found he was too fat to catch the last boat north and consequently decided to travel by canoe down the Mackenzie to Aklavik, situated on the delta of the Mackenzie where it empties into the Arctic ocean. This was the month of October and he encountered extremely cold weather. He was able to guide his canoe over rapids and through the rapidly arrowing channel of open water to within three miles of the settlement of Aklavik. There the stream froze over and he had to proceed on foot, carrying his pack over his shoulder to the post. He returned to civilization last month, but will leave once more for Sulphur Bay before the freeze-up.

Mr. Marshall sat on the jury that tried the Eskimo ikluipuk, July 5, self-confessedly murderer of one of his countrymen. Owing to the fact that the murder was committed before any example had been made of those who violated British law in the North, the jury brought in a verdict of guilty but recommended leniency.

The Eskimo was sentenced to five years imprisonment in the Stony Mountain penitentiary. Mr. Marshall remarked that the prisoner was of a small race, of Eskimos which lived around Coronation Gulf.

"They look very similar to the Japanese and are not reliable nor straightforward in their dealings," he said. On the other hand the tribe living around the shore near the mouth of the Mackenzie river were a large race of men of splendid physique. They have dark eyes and hair, resembling more closely the Russians. They are friendly to the few white trappers and hunters that find their way so far north. Mr. Marshall stated.

Beach Mystery Ends In Comedy

(By Dominion News Service.)

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Three sets of men's clothing, minus trousers, were found at midnight on the beach at Southend, and proved a puzzle for the local police.

It was thought at first that the owners had been bathing and were drowned.

An address in Holloway, London, was found in one of the pockets, and inquiries led to an explanation more humorous than tragic.

Three men went out to paddle. Following the tide out, they lost their bearings, and returning to a different part of the beach, failed to find their clothes.

They had to go home bootless and wearing trousers only. The clothes were claimed yesterday.

Energy of Thought

When man works with his body he gives off more carbon dioxide than when he sits still and uses his brain. It cannot yet be determined how much energy is required when a man adds up a column of figures, but it is of interest to determine, if possible, something of the energy expenditure of nerve tissue in general. As a step in this direction, Prof. G. H. Parker of Howard University has determined the amount of carbon dioxide excreted by the lateral line nerve of the dogfish, the sciatic nerve of the frog, and the ventral chain of the lobster.

Engineers of Health

That public health is not necessarily a medical science, is the opinion of F. A. Dallyn, provincial engineer, expressed in a paper to the engineering section of the British Association. Mr. Dallyn claimed that in such branches as sanitation, the supervision of public water supplies, milk supplies, sewerage and sewage disposal, steam production, garbage collection and disposal, including such projects as fly and mosquito control, rodent extermination, etc., the engineering element is very great. The work in those branches could, with advantage, be felt to the direction of engineers and biologists, releasing the medical personnel for their distinctive field—hygiene and nutrition.

Polynesian Politics

Primitive political systems in the Polynesian Islands were discussed today in the anthropology section of the British Association by Margaret Mead.

"In Samoa, Hawaii and New Zealand," she said, "there is found a sacred hereditary group of rulers, protected by a multitude of taboos, but their powers were greatly limited in the different islands. In Samoa their prerogatives have almost disappeared before the advance of democracy, while in Hawaii a rigid caste system has resulted. In New Zealand the Maoris have developed a very closely organized social system based on the close mutual dependence of the more and of less privileged."

Dual Wedding

(By Dominion News Service)

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Amazing scenes occurred a few days ago at the wedding of Lady Ursula Grosvenor, daughters of the Duke of Westminster, and Captain W. Filmer Sankey of the L. E. Guards at St. Mary's Cadogan-street.

When the golden-haired bride, in her shimmering gown, which sparkled with pearls, diamonds and gold embroideries, drove in a car with her father, the astonished onlookers saw that an Alfrede terrier was sitting on the seat, facing the bride.

The dog remained in the car during the ceremony.

As the bridal car approached, the great crowd, principally of women, swayed and pushed dangerously, and at one point the police control was so weakened that dozens of uninvited people pushed their way into the church.

Distinguished guests who arrived late found that owing to the influx of people from the crowd there were no seats available, although the accommodation had been much augmented by introducing hundreds of little golden chairs into the church.

The bride and her bridesmaids, who wore filmy dresses of pale lavender chiffon and had their hair bound with fillets of red roses, passed into the church between rows of uniformed Life Guardsmen with plumed helmets.

These soldiers did their best to keep clear the bridal path, but the tide of sightseers flowed over the red carpet while the service was in progress, and there had to be much energetic pushing before a way could be cleared for the bride and bridegroom to pass out under an archway of swords.

When the wedding was over and the invited guests had departed, some of the uninvited guests helped themselves to branches of the missioner Storey on a charge of

Spoils The Dream Of Endless Space

(Unjited Press)

TORONTO, Aug. 14.—Illimitable space is only poet's license. The boundless realm of the ether have been bounded. No longer can you take off into space and fly, and fly, and fly. After flying for so far, you would crash headlong into the floor, walls, or ceiling of the universe, as the case may be.

Further astronomical confirmation for his theory that the cosmos in which Mother Earth finds herself is distinctly limited in extent, was presented for the consideration of mathematical physicists at the British Association today by Dr. Ludvik Silberstein, consulting mathematician to a Rochester firm, and an authority on the subject of relativity.

Dr. Silberstein did not present his argument as a hypothesis. He proved it. His methods are not those of the Grecian philosophers, nor does he quote the writings of Moses. He puts in the necessary formulae and symbols, adds a few figures previously provided by the telescope and spectroscope, shakes them well, and out pops the result. True, the figure that tumbles off the adding machine is quite large. So large, in fact, that there need be no fears of planets bouncing against the wall.

Think how far it is from the earth to the sun. Then think of 134. Next imagine 10 times, 10 times 10, done eleven times. Then multiply them all together and try and comprehend the product. It looks more like an echo than anything else, and it might hurt to try too hard. This, no less, is the breadth of the universe from east to west, also its length from north to south, and ditto its dimensions up and down.

So sure is Dr. Silberstein of his celestial survey, that he gives as the radius of the sphere of the universe, based on the latest measurements of constants for certain stellar clusters, the figure 6.7 times 10 million astronomical units, the astronomical unit being the distance from the earth to the sun, selected by astronomers as a convenient yardstick. Not "6," mind you, or even "about 7," but just "6.7."
