The Night of the Wedding

By C. N. and A.M. WILLIAMSON

Authors of "The Lightning Conductor" and other fascinating romances of mystery and love

Copyright 1924, by Public Ledger Company

They're in this house for a special purpose, the young one and the old. But this secret belongs to the mother alone. If she wanted her daughter to know, she'd have told long ago. She won't tell now. The girl might betray her to Haste. She'd do anything to please him."

If the detective had hoped that Fanny could wheedle anything from her mother, he might have given her the chance she wanted, and played eavesdropper. But, believing there was little to gain thus, he lingered on.

"You're both kind enough to say you'd gladly help in my researches," he said, when the thimble had been returned. "This is a baffling case! The most difficult job I ever tackled. So I hope you won't mind, Mrs. Gillett, explaining what you meant about 'seeing ghosts' in this house?"

The pale woman made a desperate effort at self-control. "Seeing ghosts?" she stammered. "I don't—remember saying—any such thing to you."

"It wasn't to me," Dagon volunteered. "Some one—I forgot who—mentioned hearing you, the night of Mrs. Haste's disappearance. It was in the music room or the tapestry boudoir. I wanted to ask when I met you first, but you seemed so nervous I waited. You're all right again now, or I wouldn't upset you."

She loked faintly relieved, as if glad that he supposed her to be "all right."

"I don't know what I said then," she replied. "I was so horrified by the blood and—and everything."

"What I was told was like this," Dagon persisted. "That ghosts had appeared to you here at the Court. That you believed in the haunting of the tapestry boudoir. That you hadn't wanted the Hastes to spend their honeymoon in the house because of warnings you'd had—and of what you'd seen."

"If I said that I must have been hysterical," cried Mrs. Gillett. "Though I confess, I do believe in apparitions on a scene where a crime has taken place."

"Oh you think a crime has taken place at the Court?"

"Probably many crimes, the place is so old."

"Had you any one particular crime in your mind?"

She loked hunted, but was driven to answer, "The bride who disappeared."

"You don't mean Mrs. Haste?"

"Oh, no! The bride in the eighteenth century; about the time they lost knowledge of the secret rooms—if there are any. She was the first Lady Wells at Hidden Hall Court."

"And an Italian?"

"Yes; I've heard so."

"Strange how many Italians have helped to make history for this old place!"

Mrs. Gillett looked up, a flush on her cheekbones, but Dagon's face was expressionless, and she made no answer. Instead, she bent intently over her work. The detective watched her for a moment; then flung a double question at her hed; "And Mr. Paolo Magnani—you know him? He comes here often?"

The eyes of the mother and daughter met. It was the younger woman who replied: "I know Mr. Magnani. Mother doesn't. She lived here only a short time, and he's been too busy with a picture his company's making to visit his cousin. I met him while I was nursing Captain Haste. And he was at the wedding. What brought Mr. Magnani to your mind?

"Well, he can't be mixed up in the disappearance anyhow!" cried the V. A. D. "He told me at the wedding reception that he was leaving at once for Skye. There was something in the paper next day, too, about his going. So you can't suspect him of having a hand in the business?"

"Why should he have?" Dagon shrugged. "He wasn't in love with Miss Carroll, was he?"

"Certainly not!" snapped Fanny. "If he ever did admire her, he changed his mind. I wouldn't be surprised if he married the aunt. She's got pots of money."

"And she'd have more if Mrs. Haste died and left her something," the Canadian remarked. "What did Mr. Magnani do in the war?"

"He was exempted, on account of a weak heart," said Fanny.

"It's an ill heart that does no one good," garbled Dagon. "Was he in his own country or England while the war was on?"

"Mostly in Englnd, acting I believe, but England is his own country now. Mr. Magnani has been naturalized as an Englishman. Living here so much, it gives him advantages, I suppose."

Dagon agreed. He had got all he could hope to get in one interview from the mother and daughter, and it seemed from what he heard on all sides that no theory which included Magnani in the list of suspects would hold water. A man couldn't be doing moving-picture "stunts" in Skye and murdering or kidnapping girls at the same time!

Apparently the cinema star was innocent and Dagon must look farther for his "Unknown." Yet he was not satisfied with that conclusion.

Of course, it might be a coincidence but it was odd that nearly all the old servants had gone about the same time. It was easy to account for the footmen. They had "joined up," and women had taken their places. Lately, new footmen had been obtained. The cook had received a legacy and "given up" service. Mrs. Gillett, in becoming housekeeper, had swept away housemaids like cobwebs and imported proteges of her own. Davis the butler, had left suddenly and Marianti had been found through the recommendation of Magnani. Though Rawdon Wells had been "smashed up" in the autumn of 1915, he had done war work of some kind and had spent much time in London. It was then that his "palship" with Pandora Haste had been cemented, and the girl had perhaps imagined him in love with her—till Eve appeared on the scene. So it happened that no one could tell much about what went on at Hidden Hall Court in the years of the war.

BORDEN NOTES

The Misses Lillian and Jennie Noonan, spent the Mardi Gras celebrations with their sister, Mrs. John Murray and also with friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Corney, spent the week-end visiting their father Mr. Samuel Corney.

Mr. Sandy Mottart of Carleton Corner, has moved a house in the town where he intends to have it in first class for rental by the first of June.

Now that the big thaw is over it has left the ice in the very best of condition on the harbour and everybody is taking advantage of this fine weather by enjoying a good skate every afternoon.

The Borden Whist Club came to a very enjoyable close on February 23rd at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Murray, when some very useful prizes were given, ten in all. The ladies regular prize was won by Mrs. J. D. Murphy, and the gentlemen by Mr. M. E. Bernard. After the regular prizes were distributed came the closing of the Borden whist tournament there being six special prizes for the ones having the highest number of points since the beginning of the whist club. The ladies winnfng were Mrs J. A. Gaudet as first and Mrs. J. D. Murphy second. The gentlemen winning were Mr. James Murphy, first and Mr. John Murray as second. After the destribution of the special prizes a very complimentary address was read by Mrs. John Murray and presentation made by Mrs James McAleer of a nice pair of military hair brushes to Mr. Walter O'Brien who was acting as manager and director of the Borden Whist Club. The address and presentation was followed by a few words of thanks by Mr. O'Brien who was very much taken by surprise by the Club members of the whist. He was followed by Mr. J. D. Murphy a very interesting speaker who spoke very highly of the club and the way it was looked after for, it being a credit to the little town of Borden. He also thanked the ladies of the Club for being so generous with their lunches at each whist night. After refreshments were served the rest of the night was spent in music and singing and all left for their homes after joining in the National Anthem and hoping to meet again after Lent to enjoy another good night's fun.

The Mardi Gras celebration took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James McAleer, where a good pancake supper was served by the ladies of Borden to which everybody did full justice. The night was spend in dancing and singing with very good music which was enjoyed by all present. A vote of thanks was tendered to the ladies for their generous work of the night and also for the whist season just over, by Mr. Walter O'Brien and was seconded by Mr. M. E. Bernard. Everybody left for their homes with a merry good cheer.

The Address and Presentation.

Mr. Walter O'Brien, manager and director of Borden Whist Club.

Dear Walter,—

Our most faithful and obliging friend.

On this the last night of our whist for this season we, the members of this club, wish to tender you our heartfelt thanks for your never tiring energy in behalf of this whist club. Your management of it has been without fault or favor and you have denied yourself the pleasure of taking a hand at it to look after the rest of our welfares.

We wish you to accept this small present as a token of our esteem and appreciation of your good work. And we have all reason to hope that after Lent we will have the pleasure of presenting you with a present on a more interesting occasion. We therefore wish you and the young lady every success.

Signed on behalf of the
BORDEN WHIST CLUB

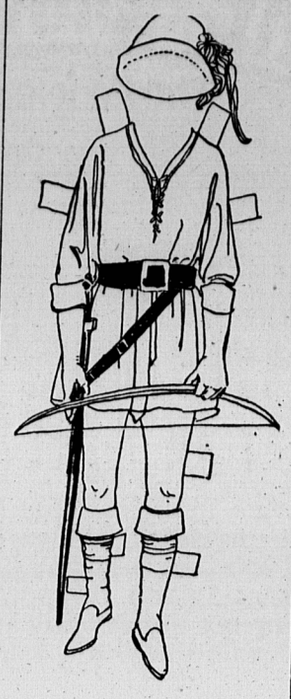
Improving Live Stock

On a recent trip through King's County the writer had the privilege of looking over a splendid specimen of the Black and White in Lawndale Prince, owned by Mr. Colin MacBeath one of the enterprising farmers of Forest Hill. This splendid younster was dropped on April 23rd, 1924 and was bred by Messrs. A. R. MacKay and Son, Lawndale Farm, Charlottetown. He is one of the best inidividuals of the breed having a typical Holstein head a good straight top line and shows indications of size. As to breeding this bull carries the best that can be procured along milking lines. His sire Lawndale Pioneer herd sire for Mr. MacKay is a paternal brother of the noted Springbank Snow Countess, whose R. O. M. records as a two and a three year old are 28.72 pounds butter and 30.71 pounds butter and whose two years old semi-official. Record is 948.75 pounds butter.

Lawndale Pioneer's fist three daughters to come into milk have each got very creditable records. Francis Dent Dekol finishes second in a class of thirteen junior two years olds with 395.6 pounds milk and 16.89 pounds butter. Beatrice Butter Girl stands eighth with 321.8 pounds milk and 15.83 pounds butter while Lawndale Beauty Mercedes has a record of 313 popuds milk and 14.17 pounds butter. Besides carrying such choice breeding as stock above Lawndale Prince's mother is Princess Nellie Scho whose R. O. M. record at four years is 645.6 pounds milk and 29.70 pounds butter with an average test of about 3.7% fat her best day's milk being 96 pounds.

Princess Echo Sylvia is a daughter of Prince Echo Sylvia who has eleven recorded daughters and nine proven sons. With such ancestry Lawndale Prince should be a valuable asset to this section of King's County and we trust that the surrounding farmers will appreciate Mr. MacBeath's enterprise.

Sleeping Beauty



THE MAGIC HEDGE

The men with the prince tried to keep him from going near the palace, fearing some harm might come to him, but he rode bravely up to the high hedge, took out his sword, and was about to cut his way through.

To his great surprise, the thorny branches parted, making a path before him. As he stepped forward the branches closed again behind him, shutting him off from the rest of his party. There was nothing for him to do but go ahead.

When he had passed through the house he found himself in the palace yard, among the tall trees. There was a terrifying, ghostlike stillness about the whole place The prince made his way carefully between the trees. Suddenly he stopped and drew his sword in alarm!

(What frightened the prince? Wait until tomorrow and see. In the meantime color his hunting suit and hat brown.)

Canadians On South African Battlefields Twenty-Five Years Ago

TORONTO, Feb. 26—Just twenty five years ago Canadian tropps were winning their spurs on the battlefields of South Africa, the first Canadian contingent taking part in the operations and the severe fighting which culminated in the battle of Paardeburg, and the surrender of General Piet Cronje and his Boer forces on Majuba Day, February 27th.

To the Canadian the commemoration of the battle of Paardeburg has special significance in the fact that it was the first time in which a military unit rased and officered in Canada, battled alongside Veteran regiments of the British line, overseas in the defence of the Empire.

There was sharp preliminary fighting and a gallant charge, with heavy losses. The Canadians delivered the final assault which defeated the Boer forces.

There are survivors of the South African war in many parts of Canada and Friday, Feb. 27th, will be celebrated as Paardeburg day in various ways.

Tried everything. Even operation. Only Kellogg's helped him.

Yours truly,
L. T. WILLIAMS,

MORE HUMOURS OF HISTORY

By ARTHUR MORELAND

No. 29. Sweyn's Revenge

A. D. 1012. After ten years unceasing devastation in revenge for the massacre of 1002, the Danish King Sweyn landed with a large force. Incompetent as Ethelred was, the defeat of the English was largely due to traitors, among them, Edric, the King's favourite. Sweyn was proclaimed King, at Bath. Ethelred fled to the Isle of Wight.
