TROUBLE WITH TRAFFIC RULES

CAPE TOWN, S. Africa, June 21.—(By The Canadian Press)—A judgment of great importance to motorists was delivered in the Supreme Court here by Mr. Justice Jones, when he held that the regulation requiring traffic to keep to the left of the road at all times was intra vires. A Cape Town magistrate had previously ruled that the words "whether approached by another vehicle or not," rendered the regulation unreasonable and ultra vires. In quashing this decision, Mr. Justice Jones said that the regulation was not "unjust, or made in bad faith." The by-law providing that drivers must keep to the left-hand side of the road at all times, is therefore upheld. The case arose out of the prosecution of one Harry H. Goode for failing to keep his car on the left side of Roeland Street. When dismissed by the magistrate it was appealed to the Supreme Court by the Attorney-General.

NATIVES INTERFERE

WIFE MINING
LONDON, Eng., June 21.—(By The Canadian Press)—A recent issue of the Times shows that the attitude of the natives—"the Empire's backward citizens"—in Africa is likely to prevent continuation of mining operations in at least one instance. Chief Tsokedi of Bamangwato interviewed

Character Close-Ups

Lord Passfield in London, and was told that the termination of the British South Africa Company's mining concession in the Bechuanaland Protectorate is a matter for legal decision. He was also assured that if the concession is terminated in the courts of law, the British Government will not enforce the opening up of mining in the country, but will only act with the consent of the natives.

Points to Happy Marriage
Sage Advice to June Bride
Dorothy Dix

"Try to see Your Husband's Good Points Instead of Looking for His Bad Ones, and Bear in Mind That Marriage is Just as Hard on Him as it is on You," is Dorothy Dix's Advice to Brides

Here are some tips for the June bride that, faithfully followed, will keep her out of the divorce court: Get off on the right foot. Remember that the first year of marriage, like the first year of a child's life, sets the pattern for your whole future existence. The habits, the precedents, the way of handling situations you establish then, the attitude you and your husband take toward each other will be fixed during that crucial year, so watch your step when you start stumbling down the dangerous road of matrimony. Don't go to live with your mother or his mother or any of your in-laws if it is possible to avoid such a peril. Go off by yourselves where you can have your little spats without having any third party standing around to referee the fight. No two persons of different sexes, brought up in a different environment, with different ideals and points of view on every subject from politics to pie, can adjust themselves each other without some friction. If there is no onlooker after they have had their little quarrel they kiss and make up and no harm is done, but with mother on the sidelines urging Tom to assert himself as head of his own house or to weep over Mary and "poor thing" her, it starts a row that not infrequently ends in wrecking her home. Besides, the presence of any third party in a home is a bar to the confidences that keep a young couple from really growing into one.

Don't throw away the bait with which you caught your fish. This goes double for both your personal appearance and your conversational line. No man ever yet fell in love with a slovenly, sloppy woman with cold cream on her face, but plenty of men fall out of love with wives who look at home like something the cat brought in. Never forget that your husband goes from you in the morning to an office that is full of spick-and-span girls who have on the latest thing in complexions and hairdressing and manicuring.

And don't forget that your husband married you because you flattered and cajoled him and made him believe that you thought he was about seven feet high and was more of a sheik than Rudy Vallee and smarter than President Hoover and Mr. Mellon rolled into one. A man is as bound to have flattery as a child is to have candy. Deny him sweets at home and he will go to the shop down the street for it.

Don't put your reform theories to work on your husband. Try them out on prohibition or the heathen or the movies or something. By the time a man is old enough to get married and has sufficient sense to make enough to support a wife he knows what he likes to eat and wear and the people he enjoys, and he doesn't enjoy being told that his taste is bad and that he lacks judgment and that his friends are a poor lot who are not good enough for his wife to associate with. Lay off your husband's personal tastes and habits and remember that he didn't marry to get a critic or a jaller.

Give your husband an evening out every week with no questions asked. The poor, hard-worked, domestic drudge deserves it. And take one yourself. There are no two persons such dull company for each other as those who know exactly the same things and the same people and who haven't even a new story to tell each other.

No woman makes a greater mistake than the one who tags her husband and who insists on going out with him every time he leaves home and who never even gives him a vacation by himself when he can do many things that he loves to do instead of being bored to death sitting around a hotel and going window-shopping with her. Every woman knows that she would die of boredom if she didn't have feminine companionship and every wife might well reflect that a husband has an equal need of masculine society.

Don't talk too much. Don't tell your husband everything you think you think, for sometimes you don't think it. Don't tell your husband every time you make a mistake or do anything foolish. Every man takes his wife at her own valuation and if she press-agents her successes and shows him the grand bargains she has bought and calls his attention to the superb pie she has made, he swells out his chest and thinks that he has a world's wonder of a wife. But if you tell him all about how the vegetable man short-changed you and weep over your burned plate, he will consider you a moron and wonder what the fool-killer was doing the day he married you.

Don't discuss your husband's faults with anybody. Most of all, don't talk them over with your mother. Don't even let yourself think about them. Of course, you are going to be disappointed in him. You are going to find out he isn't the demigod you thought he was. No man is and no woman could stand one if there was such a perfect creature, so be thankful that you've got a husband who is human even as you are and let it go at that. Every time a married person dwells on the shortcomings of his or her partner it is like pressing on a boil that gets sorer and sorer until it becomes an incurable abscess.

Cultivate a sense of humor. There are many things in married life at which we must either laugh or weep, and a funny bone will do more than all the moralities to keep you out of the divorce court. Men forsake wives who are beauties and wits and angels, but never one who is good-natured.

Don't be a spoil sport and raise a million objections to every plan your husband suggests for a little pleasure. The reason that most neglected wives are neglected is because they have proved themselves wet blankets on every festive occasion. Cultivate chumminess with your husband so that when the flare of passion dies out you will have the steady glow of friendship to fall back upon.

Finally, love your husband. Try to see his good points instead of looking for his bad ones, and bear in mind that marriage is just as hard on him as it is on you and that he has to sacrifice just as much as you do.

Milady Beautiful

Arrange the waves

Dear Miss Leeds—(1) My hair used to be naturally wavy and glossy, but since I have been having very poor health there is scarcely a wave in my hair and it looks dull and lifeless. Would my physical condition cause this? Would the warm-oil treatments help my type of hair? What shall I do to restore the natural wave? (2) I have medium brown hair, hazel eyes and a medium complexion. What colors are becoming for my type? I am 21 years old, 5 feet 2 inches tall and I weigh 100 pounds. Am I very much underweight?

MISS HOPEFUL

Answer—Yes, your poor health is the cause of the lusterless and lifeless condition of your hair. It is one of the first things to show a rundown condition of the whole system. Build up your health by wise diet, fresh air and sunshine and sufficient sleep. In the meantime give your hair the warm-oil treatments before the shampoo. Massage your scalp and brush your hair every night and morning. If your hair has an tendency to wave naturally, encourage it by heatless curling methods. You may steam your hair by holding it near hot steam or applying hot towels, when the hair is thoroughly warm and moistened arrange the waves into place with your fingers and comb. It would be a good plan to have a few special scalp treatments and a finger wave occasionally. Please send me a self-addressed stamped envelope asking for my leaflet in which the warm-oil treatment and the scalp-massage movements, together with suitable scalp tonics, are described fully. I have not the space to reprint them again at this time. (2) You may wear peach, creamy flesh, medium raspberry, pink-violet, bottle green, reseda, warm tans, nut brown, amber canary yellow, dahlia, dark, cold reds such as wine, Burgundy, garnet and ruby. Ivory, eggshell and black if relieved with touches of bright color. (3) Your ideal weight is between 116 and 122 pounds.

LOIS LEEDS.

Dear Miss Leeds—(1) Is it all right to pluck the eyebrows that grow in scraggly and is it right to use a little eyebrow pencil when the eyebrows are very light in color and the hair dark brown? (2) Does walking strengthen one's legs or does it make one bow-legged? Some one told me that it did. (3) Please tell me a good face powder to use. My skin is rather dry. FLORENCE F.

Answer—Yes, the unruly hair may be plucked out at regular intervals to give the eyebrows a clear, well-groomed appearance. Apply a soothing lotion such as witch-hazel first, however, and use a little cold cream or oil afterward. If the eyebrows are very scraggly, have your hair dresser give you an eyebrow arch at regular intervals and then keep

Etiquette
By Roberta Lee

Q. Should one ever yawn or stretch when in the presence of others?
A. No; it is very impolite.
Q. What kind of cloth is not a mourning material?
A. Satin.
Q. When using a tablecloth, which has lace insertions, what should one avoid?
A. One should be careful never to put it over satin, or over a color.
