Duchess Of York Has Distinction In Married Life

Wife Of King's Son Never Sensational Says Lady Cynthia Asquith In Her New Book.

By Thomas T. Champion, Canadian Press Staff Writer.

LONDON, Oct. 27.—It is nearly 10 years since Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon, the youngest daughter in England's latest fairy-tale, married the 'King's son' and gracefully stepped into history as the Duchess of York. With this introduction Lady Cynthia Asquith opens her book on "The Married Life of the Duchess of York," published here just lately by Hutchinson. Lady Cynthia begins her story when the Duke and Duchess returned from Australia, a journey which separated them for many months from their baby, Princess Elizabeth.

In the matter of dress Lady Cynthia finds that the Duchess can always look distinctive without ever being sensational. "During the last few years, most women have suffered much in their breathless pursuit of fashion. Like valuable sheep they have had their tresses shorn, re-grown and shorn again; the site of their eyebrows has been continually shifted, and their finger-nails are painted every possible and impossible color. The Duchess has given all these extravagances a wide berth, but though she has never been bobbed, shingled, bingled or windswept, she has yet contrived never to look old-fashioned."

The most important episode in the public career of the Duchess of York so far was when she and the Duke held Court at Holyrood, during the Duke's appointment as the King's Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. Lady Cynthia gives an arresting account of Holyrood as it is today. "Abandoned to ghosts and caretakers by night, during the day it suffers partial invasion from signifiers who come to peer at the bed of Mary Queen of Scots, at the stain of Rizzio's blood on the floor, and at the long gallery with its portraits of Scotland's Kings—the gallery in which Prince Charlie held his revels during his brief military occupation of Edinburgh. "Undisturbed by these intrusions, the grim castle appears consecrated to its savage history. Grimly repudiating the present, its great bulk seems forever brooding over the past. Once, however, in each year it sits in its sleep, and some of its ancient splendor is revived to pay allegiance to the passing moment. This is when his Grace, the Lord High Commissioner, comes into residence. Once more bugles blow, guards are set, bagpipes wall, and crowds thicken to see their Graces with their clattering escort drive up the Royal Mile to the Assembly Hall, or the long line of carriages bringing those who attend the Commissioner's levee. Far into the night, the crowds stand to watch the brilliant lighting of the windows of the re-awakened Palace, and to hear the strains of music float across the excited city." The Duke of York was the first member of the Royal Family to be Commissioner since 1600.

A pleasant picture is afforded of the London home of the Duke and Duchess. "At whatever hour I happen to pass Number 145 Piccadilly, I always see a number of people standing opposite its door, patiently waiting in the hope that they may catch a glimpse of the Duke or one of the three white roses of York, as his wife and daughters are called. Peeping Toms have no opportunities; the plain, putty-colored, net curtains give the effect of closed eyelids to the house, and there is nothing to betray the fact that it is a Royal Residence. No sentry bars the way, and anyone who wishes may walk up the stone-flagged approach to the front door and ring one of the two bells marked "Visitors" and "house." Those who are admitted find themselves in an unusually welcoming hall, in which a blaze of flowers helps to give the impression that you are on the threshold not of a mere formal residence, but of a real home."

Lady Cynthia tells of Queen Mary once stooping over the cot of Princess Elizabeth and saying, "I wish you were more like your dear little Mother." But if Princess Elizabeth does not resemble her Mother in appearance, remarks the authoress, "I feel sure she is endowed with many of her qualities. When I visited her a few weeks ago she did the honors of the nursery with the manners of an ambassador, offering me food with the unpressing politeness of a perfect hostess, and showing herself a good listener as well as conversationalist. I have never met a child who seemed more in love with life. However heavy a burden royalty may be this little Princess has not yet been allowed to feel its weight."

"That Princess Elizabeth has been wisely brought up, and is good natured as well as good-mannered, was, I think, well proved when the birth of Princess Margaret made her a 'dowager baby.' Instead of being resented as a disturbing intruder Princess Margaret Rose was welcomed by her sister as an enchanting new possession—a magic doll surpassing the wildest dreams of Christmas Eve."

London's Show To Suffer Cuts

LONDON, Oct. 27.—(C.P.)—The Lord Mayor's show—that extraordinary piece of street pageantry presenting a blend of a guild carnival of a few centuries back and a circus process of yesterday—is to be cut down in length by at least a third this year. Complaints of how the workaday business of the City of London is thrown all awry every November 9 have been voiced for years. The procession is usually nearly a mile in length. Starting from the Guildhall it ambles and lingers its way to the Law Courts and back amidst the more or less respectful plaudits of the populace. One ancient custom rigidly observed is that the procession must pass through the ward which the new Lord Mayor represents as an alderman. As some of these wards contain streets which today are as narrow and winding as in Elizabethan times the Show not infrequently experiences difficulty in extricating itself from such ancient byways.

Last year the Home Secretary received an influential appeal that the Show should always be held on a Saturday. The Court of Aldermen thought, does not take orders, even from a Home Secretary. To make such representations effective the Home Secretary would have had to arm himself with a brand-new Act of Parliament. Jealous as is the City of London for the preservation of its independent status it rarely shows itself unreasonable, so the Lord Mayor and the Sheriff's Committee are to meet to decide how the length of the Show can be reduced by at least one-third.

JUDGE WANTS TO SEE WIFE

TORONTO, Oct. 27.—(C.P.)—"I never drive more than 28 miles an hour when my wife is in the car, and she was with me that day," said a citizen, charged in police court with driving his car at 45 miles an hour through Weston, Ont. "Better bring your wife along next week," advised the magistrate, granting a week's remand.

Slump In U. S. Imports Noted

(Associated Press) WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—An unexpected slump in United States imports plus an unusual increase in exports translated the August unfavorable trade balance of $23,000,000 into a September favorable balance of $13,000,000, the largest favorable balance since April. Department of Commerce economists privately emphasized, however, the gain was small and that its significance was somewhat blurred by the conflicting economic factors now troubling world trade.

Beatty Launches Charity Appeal

(Canadian Press) MONTREAL, Oct. 26.—Through the medium of organized charity, human suffering can best be relieved, said E. W. Beatty, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in appealing tonight for support of the fund-raising campaign of Montreal Federated Charities. Relief was particularly necessary, Mr. Beatty continued, because youth was growing up in idleness, and the accumulating effect of idleness and deprivation will in time wear down the stoutest spirit and make a man unfit for work when opportunity returns.

Price For N. S. Apples Increases In Old Country

(Canadian Press) KENTVILLE, N. S., Oct. 26.—Advancing prices on the British market heartened Annapolis Valley apple growers today. Cables from the Old Country told of a rising demand for Nova Scotian fruit at prices from two to three shillings better than had been commanded for several weeks. Quotations still were not as high as they might be, growers said, but they expressed hope of further improvement in the next few weeks. Export will continue for some time, since harvesting is far behind schedule because of a succession of rains. Small growers have practically completed picking, but there remain many thousand barrels of fruit on the trees of the larger producers. In many orchards, from one quarter to one third of the crop remains unpicked.

Lindberghs In Paris

(Associated Press) PARIS, Oct. 27.—The newspaper Rempart reported today Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh had arrived at Mureaux, near Paris, yesterday at five a. m. The report at present unconfirmed, said the Lindberghs were met at Mureaux, (a small town on the Seine), by a representative of the Air Ministry and drove to a hotel in Paris, dining with friends in the evening.

The Colonel and his wife had been expected here by officials, but a message received from Inverness, Scotland, said he had changed his mind and was not coming to Paris. The message was supposedly sent by a friend to put inquirers and expected crowds off the track. Reports said the Lindberghs expected to stay in Paris for a few days, but their subsequent plans were not disclosed. At the Hotel Clifton, it was said that "nobody by the name of Lindbergh is in our books."
