

O-O-O-H! MY CHAPPED HANDS ARE SO SORE

HERE'S SOOTHING RELIEF

— FASTER HEALING

If your hands get so chapped, so red and rough that they actually feel sore—take a tip from nurses! Get a jar of the Medicated Skin Cream, Noxzema, and apply it frequently during the day and at night. Notice how soothing and cooling it feels. The next day, see if your hands don't already look better!

Noxzema is so effective because it's not just a soothing cream. It's a medicated formula that not only relieves the burning, stinging soreness, but helps heal the tiny skin cuts—helps soften the dry, rough skin and restore normal soft smoothness. Actual tests with chapped hands show that Noxzema helps heal

NOXZEMA Skin Cream

R.C.A.F. Service Police have been issued with new insignia of their trade. The new outfits for male S.P.'s and those of W.D. S.P.'s on city and train patrols are shown above. The hat bands are scarlet with black lettering as are the arm bands which bear in addition a gold compass emblem. The white gloves will be worn only on special occasions. The only new addition for S.P.'s on station will be the armband. (R.C.A.F. Photo).

The battle for sullen German garrisons along the coast of France, Dunkirk, Lorient, St. Nazaire, still goes on relentlessly... with Canadian and British guns pounding these pockets day and night. Old Man Mud rules supreme however; and here are Canadian gunners piling ammunition along a narrow gauge track, along which carts are hand pushed at Dunkirk as the mud is too deep for trucks. (Canadian Army Overseas Photo)

ALSO THE HILL

by Frances Parkinson Keyes

CHAPTER 38 Trembling Lips

Her lips were trembling a little now. She bit them and looked away. Before she looked back again, Horace Vaughn went on talking.

"Well, I suppose I shall have to accept your assurance with Peter Macdonald was wholly innocent in a personal way. But I still think you were indiscreet in spending so much time with him. Under the circumstances!" Under what circumstances?

"The circumstances of our own association," Vaughn said smoothly. "I did not realize then that at a time when you were accepting a great many costly presents from me, and accompanying me here and there in public, you were also lending a receptive ear to proposals of marriage from a cheap reporter representing a sensational paper which had lost no occasion to smear me and defame me."

"I don't know what you are talking about," she said. "I refused him, over and over again. But you shouldn't call him cheap, because he isn't. Peter is just as straight as they come and—"

"Jenness, you have shown admirable control up to this point and I hope you will continue to do so throughout the rest of this interview. I must remind you that it was you who sought it and also that I cannot prolong it indefinitely. I am late for a committee meeting already. I said I was willing to discuss the subject of Peter Macdonald. But what about the other members of the same paper with whom you have contact? What about Joe Racina's Peter's best friend. He took over when Peter went away."

"Yes, that is what I was given to understand."

"I don't know what your dirty spies have been telling you. When I said he took over, I didn't mean he wanted to marry me. I meant—"

"I was not given to understand, that Joe Racina wanted to marry you. After all, he is a pretty ordinary type of nobody."

"Jenness stopped gripping the desk and began to beat her chest with both small clenched fists. 'Don't you dare call him an ordinary type of nobody!' she cried. 'He isn't ordinary—he's the most unusual. He's the kindest and most cultured man I ever knew in my life. He's got just as many degrees as you have and they're not honorary degrees either! He's earned them all and worked his own way along while he did it.'

"His people are poor, but they're good Americans. They've been Americans for two generations already. Joe's got five brothers in the service. The only reason he isn't himself in the cause he can't get in. There's something the matter with his eyes and he's had asthma intermittently."

"Horace Vaughn put down the paper cutter and rested his thumb lightly on the push button near it. 'I don't want to ring this bell, Jenness,' he said agreeably. 'I don't want to create anything in the nature of a scene. But I'm afraid we are getting pretty close to one and therefore I feel it is time to bring this conversation to an end. I must warn you that if by any chance you could be misguided as to attempt to create unpleasantness of any sort for me, I shall retaliate.'

"The Brush-off. I must add that I am very happy that my mother is greatly improved in health, so that she is now able to resume her duties as my official hostess. Naturally, this will make some difference in my manner of living. You know views, and the fact that you've approved of the association between you and me. If there had been no question of the trial, publicity, indirectly aimed at me, this changed mode of living would necessarily have precluded me from seeing much of you. After a little reflection, I am sure that you will realize this. I am very sorry about the sentence, Jenness, and sorrier still that I can do nothing to avert it. I shall always remember our former association pleasantly and I regret that circumstances have combined to end it. I hope you will regard the little presents I have given you as mementoes of it and of course your salary as my secretary will continue until you are officially released. But unless you obviously you cannot continue to serve in that capacity, I suggest that you turn over the key to my private office now."

Jenness went through the plate. "I don't know as you were wise, Jenness, to try to have yourself on him like that. Of course, I tried to get in touch with him myself, every way I could think of. And I haven't succeeded. I hope you aren't sorry you went?"

"No, I'm not sorry I went. But I want to tell you now, Daddy, what really did happen. I mean the subversive literature, I mean—"

(Continued Tomorrow)

Winter Visit to Carleton Siding

by Robert A. Bryce

CHAPTER 38 Trembling Lips

Her lips were trembling a little now. She bit them and looked away. Before she looked back again, Horace Vaughn went on talking.

"Well, I suppose I shall have to accept your assurance with Peter Macdonald was wholly innocent in a personal way. But I still think you were indiscreet in spending so much time with him. Under the circumstances!" Under what circumstances?

"The circumstances of our own association," Vaughn said smoothly. "I did not realize then that at a time when you were accepting a great many costly presents from me, and accompanying me here and there in public, you were also lending a receptive ear to proposals of marriage from a cheap reporter representing a sensational paper which had lost no occasion to smear me and defame me."

"I don't know what you are talking about," she said. "I refused him, over and over again. But you shouldn't call him cheap, because he isn't. Peter is just as straight as they come and—"

"Jenness, you have shown admirable control up to this point and I hope you will continue to do so throughout the rest of this interview. I must remind you that it was you who sought it and also that I cannot prolong it indefinitely. I am late for a committee meeting already. I said I was willing to discuss the subject of Peter Macdonald. But what about the other members of the same paper with whom you have contact? What about Joe Racina's Peter's best friend. He took over when Peter went away."

"Yes, that is what I was given to understand."

"I don't know what your dirty spies have been telling you. When I said he took over, I didn't mean he wanted to marry me. I meant—"

"I was not given to understand, that Joe Racina wanted to marry you. After all, he is a pretty ordinary type of nobody."

"Jenness stopped gripping the desk and began to beat her chest with both small clenched fists. 'Don't you dare call him an ordinary type of nobody!' she cried. 'He isn't ordinary—he's the most unusual. He's the kindest and most cultured man I ever knew in my life. He's got just as many degrees as you have and they're not honorary degrees either! He's earned them all and worked his own way along while he did it.'

"His people are poor, but they're good Americans. They've been Americans for two generations already. Joe's got five brothers in the service. The only reason he isn't himself in the cause he can't get in. There's something the matter with his eyes and he's had asthma intermittently."

"Horace Vaughn put down the paper cutter and rested his thumb lightly on the push button near it. 'I don't want to ring this bell, Jenness,' he said agreeably. 'I don't want to create anything in the nature of a scene. But I'm afraid we are getting pretty close to one and therefore I feel it is time to bring this conversation to an end. I must warn you that if by any chance you could be misguided as to attempt to create unpleasantness of any sort for me, I shall retaliate.'

"The Brush-off. I must add that I am very happy that my mother is greatly improved in health, so that she is now able to resume her duties as my official hostess. Naturally, this will make some difference in my manner of living. You know views, and the fact that you've approved of the association between you and me. If there had been no question of the trial, publicity, indirectly aimed at me, this changed mode of living would necessarily have precluded me from seeing much of you. After a little reflection, I am sure that you will realize this. I am very sorry about the sentence, Jenness, and sorrier still that I can do nothing to avert it. I shall always remember our former association pleasantly and I regret that circumstances have combined to end it. I hope you will regard the little presents I have given you as mementoes of it and of course your salary as my secretary will continue until you are officially released. But unless you obviously you cannot continue to serve in that capacity, I suggest that you turn over the key to my private office now."

Jenness went through the plate. "I don't know as you were wise, Jenness, to try to have yourself on him like that. Of course, I tried to get in touch with him myself, every way I could think of. And I haven't succeeded. I hope you aren't sorry you went?"

"No, I'm not sorry I went. But I want to tell you now, Daddy, what really did happen. I mean the subversive literature, I mean—"

(Continued Tomorrow)

Winter Visit to Carleton Siding

by Robert A. Bryce

CHAPTER 38 Trembling Lips

Her lips were trembling a little now. She bit them and looked away. Before she looked back again, Horace Vaughn went on talking.

"Well, I suppose I shall have to accept your assurance with Peter Macdonald was wholly innocent in a personal way. But I still think you were indiscreet in spending so much time with him. Under the circumstances!" Under what circumstances?

"The circumstances of our own association," Vaughn said smoothly. "I did not realize then that at a time when you were accepting a great many costly presents from me, and accompanying me here and there in public, you were also lending a receptive ear to proposals of marriage from a cheap reporter representing a sensational paper which had lost no occasion to smear me and defame me."

"I don't know what you are talking about," she said. "I refused him, over and over again. But you shouldn't call him cheap, because he isn't. Peter is just as straight as they come and—"

"Jenness, you have shown admirable control up to this point and I hope you will continue to do so throughout the rest of this interview. I must remind you that it was you who sought it and also that I cannot prolong it indefinitely. I am late for a committee meeting already. I said I was willing to discuss the subject of Peter Macdonald. But what about the other members of the same paper with whom you have contact? What about Joe Racina's Peter's best friend. He took over when Peter went away."

"Yes, that is what I was given to understand."

"I don't know what your dirty spies have been telling you. When I said he took over, I didn't mean he wanted to marry me. I meant—"

"I was not given to understand, that Joe Racina wanted to marry you. After all, he is a pretty ordinary type of nobody."

"Jenness stopped gripping the desk and began to beat her chest with both small clenched fists. 'Don't you dare call him an ordinary type of nobody!' she cried. 'He isn't ordinary—he's the most unusual. He's the kindest and most cultured man I ever knew in my life. He's got just as many degrees as you have and they're not honorary degrees either! He's earned them all and worked his own way along while he did it.'

"His people are poor, but they're good Americans. They've been Americans for two generations already. Joe's got five brothers in the service. The only reason he isn't himself in the cause he can't get in. There's something the matter with his eyes and he's had asthma intermittently."

"Horace Vaughn put down the paper cutter and rested his thumb lightly on the push button near it. 'I don't want to ring this bell, Jenness,' he said agreeably. 'I don't want to create anything in the nature of a scene. But I'm afraid we are getting pretty close to one and therefore I feel it is time to bring this conversation to an end. I must warn you that if by any chance you could be misguided as to attempt to create unpleasantness of any sort for me, I shall retaliate.'

"The Brush-off. I must add that I am very happy that my mother is greatly improved in health, so that she is now able to resume her duties as my official hostess. Naturally, this will make some difference in my manner of living. You know views, and the fact that you've approved of the association between you and me. If there had been no question of the trial, publicity, indirectly aimed at me, this changed mode of living would necessarily have precluded me from seeing much of you. After a little reflection, I am sure that you will realize this. I am very sorry about the sentence, Jenness, and sorrier still that I can do nothing to avert it. I shall always remember our former association pleasantly and I regret that circumstances have combined to end it. I hope you will regard the little presents I have given you as mementoes of it and of course your salary as my secretary will continue until you are officially released. But unless you obviously you cannot continue to serve in that capacity, I suggest that you turn over the key to my private office now."

Jenness went through the plate. "I don't know as you were wise, Jenness, to try to have yourself on him like that. Of course, I tried to get in touch with him myself, every way I could think of. And I haven't succeeded. I hope you aren't sorry you went?"

"No, I'm not sorry I went. But I want to tell you now, Daddy, what really did happen. I mean the subversive literature, I mean—"

(Continued Tomorrow)

Winter Visit to Carleton Siding

by Robert A. Bryce

CHAPTER 38 Trembling Lips

Her lips were trembling a little now. She bit them and looked away. Before she looked back again, Horace Vaughn went on talking.

"Well, I suppose I shall have to accept your assurance with Peter Macdonald was wholly innocent in a personal way. But I still think you were indiscreet in spending so much time with him. Under the circumstances!" Under what circumstances?

"The circumstances of our own association," Vaughn said smoothly. "I did not realize then that at a time when you were accepting a great many costly presents from me, and accompanying me here and there in public, you were also lending a receptive ear to proposals of marriage from a cheap reporter representing a sensational paper which had lost no occasion to smear me and defame me."

"I don't know what you are talking about," she said. "I refused him, over and over again. But you shouldn't call him cheap, because he isn't. Peter is just as straight as they come and—"

"Jenness, you have shown admirable control up to this point and I hope you will continue to do so throughout the rest of this interview. I must remind you that it was you who sought it and also that I cannot prolong it indefinitely. I am late for a committee meeting already. I said I was willing to discuss the subject of Peter Macdonald. But what about the other members of the same paper with whom you have contact? What about Joe Racina's Peter's best friend. He took over when Peter went away."

"Yes, that is what I was given to understand."

"I don't know what your dirty spies have been telling you. When I said he took over, I didn't mean he wanted to marry me. I meant—"

"I was not given to understand, that Joe Racina wanted to marry you. After all, he is a pretty ordinary type of nobody."

"Jenness stopped gripping the desk and began to beat her chest with both small clenched fists. 'Don't you dare call him an ordinary type of nobody!' she cried. 'He isn't ordinary—he's the most unusual. He's the kindest and most cultured man I ever knew in my life. He's got just as many degrees as you have and they're not honorary degrees either! He's earned them all and worked his own way along while he did it.'

"His people are poor, but they're good Americans. They've been Americans for two generations already. Joe's got five brothers in the service. The only reason he isn't himself in the cause he can't get in. There's something the matter with his eyes and he's had asthma intermittently."

"Horace Vaughn put down the paper cutter and rested his thumb lightly on the push button near it. 'I don't want to ring this bell, Jenness,' he said agreeably. 'I don't want to create anything in the nature of a scene. But I'm afraid we are getting pretty close to one and therefore I feel it is time to bring this conversation to an end. I must warn you that if by any chance you could be misguided as to attempt to create unpleasantness of any sort for me, I shall retaliate.'

"The Brush-off. I must add that I am very happy that my mother is greatly improved in health, so that she is now able to resume her duties as my official hostess. Naturally, this will make some difference in my manner of living. You know views, and the fact that you've approved of the association between you and me. If there had been no question of the trial, publicity, indirectly aimed at me, this changed mode of living would necessarily have precluded me from seeing much of you. After a little reflection, I am sure that you will realize this. I am very sorry about the sentence, Jenness, and sorrier still that I can do nothing to avert it. I shall always remember our former association pleasantly and I regret that circumstances have combined to end it. I hope you will regard the little presents I have given you as mementoes of it and of course your salary as my secretary will continue until you are officially released. But unless you obviously you cannot continue to serve in that capacity, I suggest that you turn over the key to my private office now."

Jenness went through the plate. "I don't know as you were wise, Jenness, to try to have yourself on him like that. Of course, I tried to get in touch with him myself, every way I could think of. And I haven't succeeded. I hope you aren't sorry you went?"

"No, I'm not sorry I went. But I want to tell you now, Daddy, what really did happen. I mean the subversive literature, I mean—"

(Continued Tomorrow)

Leading in Quality! RED ROSE TEA "is good tea" RED ROSE Orange Pekoe Tea is extra good!

With a Hey, Nanny, Nanny! A pair of geese, found tied up and starving at a farmhouse by British troops on the Western Front, were rescued and fed and rewarded their saviors by going to work. Above, they pull a cart loaded with ration for the company cookhouse.

Out Our Way

By J. R. Williams

Our Boarding House

By J. R. Williams

With Major Hoop!

By George McManus

BRINGING UP FATHER

By George McManus

TIPPY AND "CAP" STUBBS

By Edwin

MAN OF THE HOUR!

By Webster

TILLIE THE TOILER-

By Webster

MAN OF THE HOUR!

By Webster

MAN OF THE HOUR!

By Webster

LACO MAZDA LAMPS

TIMBER LINE The timber line is the altitudinal boundary of natural tree growth.