GABBY GERTIE

"The maid who listens to a rumor is liable to lose her job."

"There's that new Zepplin." "Yes, it's a fine ship but how would you like to buy gas every time you take off?"

Wife: Do you like my new coat? Hubby: Yes but I'll bet I won't be able to say the same for the bill.

First Stud: The line on our team is like a stone wall. Second Stud: It sure is—and every fellow in it's a brick.

No More Piles
Thousands Bless Dr. Leonhardt, the Specialist Who Discovered This Common Sense Remedy
If you think that the surgeon's knife is the only method of escape from the misery of piles, it's because you haven't heard of the new treatment known as Dr. Leonhardt's HEM-ROID.
This Doctor's treatment is internal. By experimenting for years he discovered the exact cause of piles and then went further and compounded a remedy that would remove the cause. Dr. Leonhardt wants every sufferer to benefit by his discovery and so that there will be no doubting or delay, Hughes Drug Co., Ltd., and all druggists are authorized to sell HEM-ROID with guarantee that it will do as stated or money back.
On that honorable basis every sufferer should secure a package of Dr. Leonhardt's HEM-ROID today.

THEY HAD TO SEE PARIS

By Homer Croy

"I'll bet that was the first good thing that ever came out of here," he said. "I'm for peace at any price. God! The United States ought to be ashamed of the way it acted about the League of Nations. I'm awfully proud of my country and it's got it seven ways from jack over any other country in the world but now and then we can pull a bone that makes me hang my head in shame. If I could set my fool-killer loose in Washington once he'd do some mighty good work."

"There goes that fool-killer again," said Mrs. Peters. Mrs. Peters had no such destructive thoughts—the Palace was lovely. She had come to Europe expecting to find it more wonderful than America, and on every hand she found supporting evidence. The mirrors might be tarnished and the paint might be scaly, but they represented a glorious past, a past that America had never known. Kings and queens had trod these very floors. She tried to bring up the brilliant scene... the ladies in their silks and satins, bowing and curtsying; powdered and bewigged gallants kissing the ladies' hands. The doors are thrown open and a splendid silken figure enters, the court kneels, and then one by one they file by him, kissing his hand, for it is the king.

"I think it is charming," said Mrs. Peters. "How wonderful it must have been to live here."

"I'd just as soon lived in a museum," said Pike. "Think of that one poor bathroom."

Opal went through in a daze, silently looking at the great rooms and halls. When she saw a painting of a queen surrounded by her court, she placed herself in the queen's role. It never occurred to her to be a mere lady in waiting.

The guide paused before a mural painting showing seven half-dressed ladies sitting on clouds, with one happy and contented man in the midst.

"That," explained the guide, "is Louis XIV with his favorite mistresses."

Opal stared, fascinated. "What were their names?" she asked.

"Of course we must remember," said Mrs. Peters primly, "that life was different in those times from now."

They went into another great gilt room, and there in the middle of it, behind a plush rope, was a small table.

"It was on this table that the treaty of peace was actually signed," explained the guide.

They saw a small, thin-legged, inconsequential table lost in the immensity of the room.

"That little thing?" breathed Pike disappointedly. "They've got better ones in the store windows in Clearwater."

Pike's mood was growing. He refused to be impressed, while Mrs. Peters continued to exclaim over the wonders of the frayed, ghost-haunted palace.

"They went into the Room of Battles and saw before them a long gallery of battle paintings, beginning with the victory of Clovis, the first King of France, and continuing up to Napoleon.

Pike was impressed and looked at them, fascinated, for the pictures were well done and most dramatic. But he took a great dislike to Napoleon.

"If there was ever a conceited, over-estimated human being on this earth it was Napoleon," he declared with the sudden intensity that he could put into anything that touched a prejudice. "Look at him on that white horse with his hand poked in the front of his coat! Do you think anybody could get away with that stuff to-day? Not much. All he wanted was just to glorify himself. Fight, stir up trouble pick quarrels with other nations—that's all he did. And what did it amount to? After his wars and glorious campaigns and after all the soldiers he had killed for France, France didn't have as much territory when he died as when he started in—and yet they parade him around and stick him on columns and shove him at you everywhere you go as if he was God Almighty Himself."

"Pike!" whispered Mrs. Peters, "it's not right to talk that way. What if some of the French people should hear you?"

"Let 'em hear. It's what I honestly think and I don't care who knows it. I'm against war though thick and thin, and I don't fall for any of this Napoleon bunk. The world would've been a lot better off if croup had got him."

"I wish you wouldn't talk that way," said Mrs. Peters. "You're not perfect yourself. Look at the way you are acting about your evening suit. You ought to be ashamed of yourself. If that isn't being selfish and pig-headed, I don't know what is."

She continued to speak her mind. Pike's evening suit had suddenly become more important than Versailles.
