THE NAMELESS HERO.

There are countless heroes who live and die, of whom we have never heard.

While his cheek is mantled with manhood's bloom, and the pathway of his life looks bright.

Who follows the glorious tide of war, and falls in the midst of the fight.

There are plenty to laud and crown with bays, the hero who falls in strife.

FOREIGNERS ON BRITISH SHIPS. A Question That Has Caused Some Heart-burning, But No Bar Yet.

The report of the committee appointed by the Board of Trade to inquire into certain questions affecting the mercantile marine has been issued.

The number of British-born men is falling off. The members of the committee asked themselves: Is there any objection to be felt or apprehension entertained in view of the undoubted increase of foreign seamen in the mercantile marine?

It is stated that "the trade is efficiently carried on, and there is no reason to suppose that the supply of foreign seamen available will run short.

There appears to be no more real danger of scarcity of men in the event of a naval war. It is doubtful if even the subjects of the State with which we might be at war would desert their calling, and even so, the foreign seamen employed are of so many different nationalities that the supply would still be sufficient.

It is worthy of notice that Swedes are the most numerous of all the foreign seamen employed on March 31, 1901, and that the Swedes, Norwegians and Danes together amounted to more than one-third of the total number of foreigners employed.

It is probable also that some ships of the mercantile marine would necessarily be laid up in time of war, and their crews added to the number of men available for employment; and if freight and wages rose the effect would be to draw men from shore into sea employment.

As to the naval service, this committee agrees with the one appointed last year on Naval Reserves, that in the event of any great naval war it would not be practicable to draw men to any considerable extent from the crews of the sea-going vessels of the mercantile marine.—London Telegraph.

Famous Authors on Their Feet.

Professor Matthews recalls the fact that Washington Irving was a complete failure as an after-dinner speaker.

When Charles Dickens first visited New York Washington Irving was selected to take the chair.

He went about muttering "I shall certainly break down," and so he did after the first sentence or two of his speech.

He hesitated, stammered, smiled, and stopped, then sank down, whispering to his neighbor, "There! I told you I should break down, and I've done it."

Hawthorne was equally uncomfortable on his feet, and the following note was found in his notebook: "Anybody may make an after-dinner speech who will be content to talk onward without saying anything. My speech was not more than two or three inches long, but being once started I felt my embarrassment, and went coolly on as if I went going to be hanged."

Thackeray, unlike Dickens, was a failure as an after-dinner speaker. "Philip" he writes: "A day will soon arrive (but I own, mind you, that I do not carve well) when we shall have the speeches done by a skilled waiter at a side table as we have the carving."

While Irving, Thackeray and Hawthorne dreaded the public dinner, Sir Walter Scott was in his element when acting as chairman.—Harry Furness, in The Strand.

The Dispute is an Old One. It is an extraordinary circumstance that the two oldest and most vexatious complications with which the latter day diplomacy has been beset should be centred in the Island of Newfoundland, the most ancient colony.

One of these entanglements is the French shore question, the other is the Atlantic fisheries question. Both had their origin in the troublesome times of the eighteenth century, and the legacy of irritation and international bickerings which they have proved is an eloquent testimony to the supineness or inaptitude of the British statesmen of those days, who trafficked in the peerless fisheries of Newfoundland with every power that had to be conciliated.—P. T. McGrath in Nineteenth Century.

A BIT OF PANTOMIME.

Max O'Rell's Opinion of Four Peoples Given in Gestures.

"When Max O'Rell came to Montreal some years ago," said a man from that city to a Detroit Journal contributor, "we fixed up a little joke on him.

We had noticed how gracefully he could unite a caustic criticism with a compliment, a faculty that enabled him to say the sharpest things without offending the people he was criticising.

We were going to put the faculty to a test. "We had him lunch with us, and there were at the table besides himself an Englishman, a Scotchman, an Irishman and a French-Canadian.

When we got our guest off his guard we demanded an honest opinion of the different races we represented. As the opinion had to be given in the presence of all four, the situation for him was a rather delicate one.

But it never seemed to trouble him, and he gave his opinion without a moment's hesitation. "The Scotchman," he said, and he clinched his right hand tightly and pretended to try to force it open with his left.

"The Englishman"—and he went through the same performance, opening the hand at the end after an apparent struggle. "The Irishman"—and he held out his hand wide open, with the palm upward.

"The Frenchman"—and he made a motion with both hands as if he were emptying them on the table.

"There was not a word of explanation, but we all understood thoroughly and had a hearty laugh. Max O'Rell had maintained his reputation."

A Lincoln Joke.

One of Lincoln's visitors in the early days of his administration says: "He walked into the corridor with us, and as he bade us goodby and thanked — for what he had told him, he again brightened up for a moment and asked him in an abrupt kind of way, laying his hand as he spoke with a queer but not unkind familiarity on his shoulder, 'You haven't such a thing as a postmaster in your pocket, have you?'"

"— stared at him in astonishment and I thought a little in alarm, as if he suspected a sudden attack of insanity. Then Mr. Lincoln went on: 'You see, it seems to be kind of unnatural that you shouldn't have at least a postmaster in your pocket. Everybody I've seen for days past has had foreign ministers and collectors and all kinds, and I thought you couldn't have got in here without having at least a postmaster get into your pocket.'—The True Abraham Lincoln."
