Those serving tea at the Charlottetown Tennis Courts this afternoon are Miss Beryl DeBlais and Miss Margaret Martin.

NEW YORK — You can buy your raincoats fully lined if you wish them that way, or have them skeleton-lined where lightness is a demand of the moment. For example, a woman's parka will raincoat is self-lined deeply down each side of the front to give the wearer added protection. This is a boxy coat model. Natural, black, and French blue are the colors. Cut amply full, the coat has a turndown collar which fits closely about the neck. Wear it with a sash belt or without, and the lines of the coat are pleasing either way.

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Marital Boredom

Couples Would Fare Better With Consideration For Each Other

According to tradition, the proper thing for a young couple to do when they get married is to settle down and have no interests outside of the four walls of their home. Never was there a greater mistake. Marriage is no place to slump. It calls for action. And we betide the husband and wife who do nothing towards making their marriage a success, but depend on Nature keeping it a going concern. There never was a marriage that did not need to be treated with artificial respiration at times.

Because, during the days of courtship, a youth and maiden were all-in-all to each other and never waded of each other's prattle and of gazing into each other's eyes, they thought they would never crave any other diversion or companionship. They forgot that the way human nature is constituted we must have variety in our social contacts, as well as in everything else, to make life interesting.

So after they had unpacked their wedding presents they fell into the rut that a wit has described as differing from the grave only in being longer. They scrapped their most pleasant little ways. They quit going out to evenings. They stopped dancing. They didn't bother to dress up any more. Their old friends drifted away from them. They resigned from their clubs. And after a while they sat up in silence when they were alone because they had talked out and had nothing interesting to say to each other.

AT CRISIS OF FATE

They didn't know it, but they had come to the crisis of their fate, for they were facing the greatest danger that ever comes to married couples, and that is boredom. It is the enemy that is always lying in wait to catch them if they don't watch out, and it is why a husband and wife should make a never-ending effort to put some pep into domestic life and to be something more than just a meal ticket or a cook to their mates.

Most of the tragedies of marriage—the divorces, the broken-up homes, the poor, cheated, half-orphaned little children—stem right back to the husband and wives who have not even tried to make home life entertaining and amusing. Yet most of the philandering husbands are out hunting some woman with whom they can pass a gay and diverting evening, instead of having to listen to a curtain lecture at home.

And the great majority of the married men who spend their evenings in poolrooms, instead of at their own firesides, have been driven to it by wives who have let themselves get so dull that they have nothing to talk about, except the baby cutting a new tooth and butchering their meat has gone up. And nobody can deny that the chief reason that women become naggers is because the only thing a wife can do when her husband only grunts at her when she speaks to him is to scream at him.

Instead of slumping when they get married, wise husbands and wives make an extra effort not only to be good companions to each other and thereby save scandal and divorce, broken hearts, alimony and other unpleasantness, but they lay up a security for their old age. They have kept their friendships in repair, as Benjamin Franklin advised, so they have plenty of entertainment and amusement when their children marry and leave them. And, best of all, they are good friends with each other.

THE STARS SAY—

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE
For Sunday, June 22

SUNDAY'S horoscope holds augury of the sudden appearance of certain new openings, change, journeys or new contacts or agreements, these having sign of romance and dramatic appeal. Nevertheless there are indications of unforeseen and surprising twists to such fine prospects that may have unsuspected denouement, with loss and regret, instead of promised benefits and enjoyments. Shun haste, rash and unadvised behavior.

Birthday Forecast

Those whose birthday it is may be quite taken by surprise by the abrupt opening for important change, travel, novel or spectacular adventure, with hope of dramatic and romantic culmination. However, such thrilling adventure may be built upon foundations of "Dead Sea fruit," and eventuate in loss and regret, with funds, credit, position and peace of mind jeopardized, unless strict observation of codes and conventions, not emotional urges, dominate the choice and conduct. Weigh every agile realistically.

AMERICAN ROYALTY

Mrs. Jones, a London lady, was proudly discussing her new American son-in-law with a neighbor.

"My Gwendolyn has done very well for herself. I must say," she boasted. "After all, 'tisn't every day a young girl marries an American lord."

"An American lord? Why, I ain't never 'eard of such a thing in all my born days," said the neighbor. "I wouldn't tell you a lie," said Mrs. Jones. "Ain't you ever 'eard of the American housing shortage? That's why Gwendolyn's husband is so hooty-tooty. He's a real American lord—a landlord!"

SAVORY HEART LOAF

1 pound heart
1 cup chopped onion
3 cups soft crumbs
1/2 cup milk
1 egg
1 1/2 teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
Chill sauce or catsup

METHOD: Wash the heart, using either beef, lamb, veal or pork heart, and cut away any tough tubes and remove excess fat. Add the onion and put through the food chopper, using a fine blade. Add the crumbs, milk, egg and dash of pepper, and mix well. Place in a well greased loaf pan and cover the top with a thin layer of chill sauce or catsup. Bake in a moderate oven (350 deg. F.) for about 1 hour and 10 minutes. Serve with cream sauce, if desired.

Hints on Etiquette

It is an old custom to give a newly engaged girl a cup and saucer or set of them for a gift.

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

Ellen went home this morning, catching the early bus at the corner store. She went through the early hush of morning when the pond below the front meadow was a still mirror reflecting the fresh-leaved alders, a slim maiden of a birch and heaps of unsawed logs on its surface. Birds flung gay songs to the day, not to destroy the levelness but only to enhance it, and cattle browsed on the general green of a hillside. Ellen is a fairly tall, and slight girl, dark haired, only "sweet sixteen" but with a quiet and mature manner. This hides a merriness and a happy sense of humor unsuspected by casual acquaintances. She has many gifts, but perhaps the one I admire most of all and enjoy best is her ability to describe past incidents. This she can do minutely and in a way that leaves one chuckling at her humor. "Come again" James called after her, which is the very essence of our hospitality at Alderlea, before he turned away smiling to go to his work. James may be a little partial to this one of my many nieces, but then as some one has remarked: "What's in a name?"

POOR EATING HABITS OF THE RUNABOUT CHILD

When a youngster begins to run about, the may develop an appetite that causes him to want food between meals, with the result that he or she is not hungry at meal times much to the discouragement of the mother. There are also youngsters who do not eat between meals and they also seem to have no appetite at meal time. This means, then that the run-about youngster is a problem when he lacks appetite for food.

In the "Journal of Pediatrics," Drs. Edith S. Howitt and C. Anderson Aldrich, Mayo Clinic, report that among 360 children from one to three years of age in a well-baby clinic, 82 (23 per cent) were reported by their mothers to be troubled with loss of appetite. Some of the simple directions given to these mothers were: (1) Stop forcing the youngster to eat his food; (2) Offer mostly the foods that the child likes without coaxing too much or using threats; (3) Remove uneaten food without calling attention to food not eaten, and offer no more until the next meal; and

Mending

When mending plaids or checks try using several shades of silk together in the needle, selecting colors to harmonize with the goods. After pressing, the mend will hardly be noticeable.

Prune Custard

Proune custard can be made by cutting stewed prunes in quarters, and adding lemon custard, topped with the white of an egg. It will make a delicious dessert.

A Convenience

If a pencil is tied to the telephone, many steps will be avoided. Tie it securely or it will disappear just like the others have done.
