A SUITOR TOO MANY MILDRED BARBOUR

Siddons stood there, extending a silver salver while lay a letter. His veiled glance was significant.

CHAPTER 65 A WAY OF FINDING OUT

In the city of New York that night there could scarcely have been two more puzzled men than Herbert Ware and Jack Farquhar. Running them a good third, perhaps, was the man called Jenkins, but he had washed his hands of the whole affair, so he hardly counted. It was, in fact, this thorough handwashing of his that caused the puzzlement of Herbert.

He was reading in the library when Siddons brought him a letter delivered by a special messenger. Signed by Jenkins and worded stiffly, it proved to be in the nature of a report.

The gist of it was that Jenkins resigned from the case, because he had reason to believe that he had been made the butt of a practical joke and that his valuable time had been wasted in a scheme to tickle some one's sense of humor. He added, with a heavy attempt at sarcasm, that he had undertaken the case in good faith, believing that Mr. Ware knew his own wife by sight.

At home, at that very minute, he was saying to Mrs. Jenkins: "What do you think of that for a dumb stunt, Nellie? That guy showed me a picture of this other bird's fiancée and said it was his wife, and the young one was after! And here I was running my legs off trailing her."

"What do you make of it, Jim?" "I don't make anything and I'm not trying. Only I'll bet anything you care to name that this Ware fellow is trying to steal Farquhar's girl. Don't ask me how, because I'm no Sherlock Holmes, but that's the dope as I see it."

Herbert, meanwhile, had read the detective's letter. It left him with a sensation of complete blankness. It also, after a time, produced a certain sheepish feeling. He could only interpret the report in one way—that the detective had found his (Herbert's) suspicions so totally groundless that he believed a joke had been played upon him. Herbert determined to drop the whole affair. He was feeling distinctly foolish. Likewise, he had a decided consciousness of guilt. If, as he reflected, pretty near to put a detective on the trail of one's wife, especially when you find out later that she is thoroughly innocent.

His relief at this revelation was patent. He got up and went to Lila's boudoir, where she was pretending to read while she worried herself sick over her difficulties. He took her into his arms, without explanation for the tenderness withheld for weeks, and she nestled against his shoulder and was wildly happy. Siddons and May Varney and Dorothy. Nothing mattered except the fact that the man she loved was holding her close and kissing her soft curls that lay against her cheek—the man for whom she was playing this dangerous game.

With each kiss, she was saying to herself: "It may be the last time! . . . But it mustn't be! I can't give him up! I'll die, if I lose him!"

When Herbert had gone to his own room and Siddons had closed the house for the night, there was a knock at Lila's door.

When she opened it, Siddons stood there, extending a silver salver on which lay a letter. His veiled glance was significant.

"Mr. Ware dropped this on the library floor. Shall I destroy it? Or, perhaps, Madam would be interested in reading it?"

Lila took it, read it through, and went white. She was conscious of the butler's curious stare.

"Thank you, Siddons," she managed to say, as she closed the door. Then, very slowly, with her heart beating painfully, she re-opened the detective's report.

"It filled her with horror to realize the danger which had hung over her in the past weeks. She realized more than ever that something must be done to get rid of Farquhar before another detective appeared on the scene. But what?"

The tinkling of the telephone in her dressing-room roused her from her reverie of profound gloom. She was certain that Dorothy was calling. No one else would call at that hour of the night. But still she was frightened when she took down the receiver and said:

"Yes?" Her heart stood still when Farquhar's voice answered: "May I speak to Mrs. Ware? It is very important."

Lila was fairly caught. She had to say something. Farquhar would naturally expect to find Mrs. Ware at home at that hour. It was a trick. And he would recognize the voice that answered him.

Something Lila had read once in a story came back to her in a flash. She snatched a round pearl button from a little ivory box on her dressing-table and put it in her mouth. Then, with disguised utterance, she said: "Mrs. Ware is out. She had not returned from the theater."

"Who is speaking, please?" Farquhar demanded crisply. "Her maid."

"Will you kindly tell Mrs. Ware when she returns, that it is most important that Captain Farquhar speak with her tonight. I will await a call from her at my hotel."

That Car Of Yours

By WILLIAM ULLMAN Heart-to-Heart Talks With Automobile Owners and Drivers on How to get the Most Out of Their Cars at the Least Expense.

"HIGH" SOMETIMES LOW

Life's marked mobility has created a situation whereby the car owner buys his gasoline from many different stations, some of which are months of the year when the open road calls. There are many good stations from which to buy gas, but the fact that all of them do not handle the same brands interposes the need for a precaution. That is to remember that "high test" is a general term and may mean an entirely different thing as applied to different gasolines. Sometimes, "high" is low as compared with what the car is accustomed to get.

GETTING MORE CARELESS?

Motor car owners must be getting careless. Garage and service station operators declare they are getting a constantly larger time for business because motorists, never taking an inventory of the tool kit, find themselves without jack, lug wrench, or pliers when caught with a flat tire. It is a form of forgetfulness that runs into money unless one has flat tires directly in front of the repair shop.

AT THIS TIME OF YEAR

The period has passed when there is danger of the license plates dropping off because of looseness in the nuts that hold them. If the nuts have loosened, they have rusted fast. Just the same, there is a chance that previous unchecked looseness is resulting in noise that can be eliminated easily.

LISTEN TO THE EXHAUST

Few motorists ever listen to the exhaust. Yet, it is an excellent method of telling the degree of smoothness with which the engine is running. It is often a tip to the need of a small adjustment.

JUST WHAT TO SUSPECT

When the ammeter suddenly starts registering on the discharge side, it is the motorist's cue to act. Where to start puzzles some. If the generator is driven by the fan belt, as is likely is, first note whether the belt is too loose or broken. If everything is found in good condition, then have a look at the battery connections. The chances are that one of these conditions will be found guilty.

THERE IS A DIFFERENCE

There is one point, among several, that should be borne particularly in mind when buying a used car. That is that unlike when buying a new machine, appearance is a secondary consideration. It is all right to give appearance a big margin in the latter case because all new cars are good these days. In the case of the used car, the condition of the chassis is the big item to be considered. This, of course, does not eliminate appearance as a factor.

BUT WHY PERMIT IT

Experienced motorists do not get alarmed when the accelerator, undeliberated at its various points of anchorage or suffering from a deficient spring tension, begins to stick slightly. They merely pull it up with the side of their shoes. Sometimes it becomes second nature for them to resort to this practice. That is wrong. No matter how skillful one is in freeing a sticking accelerator, there are times when failure is inevitable and the punishment is inflicted upon the transmission gears. When the accelerator sticks, have it freed at once.

Sydney Man Wins Swim

HALIFAX, Sept. 17.—Striking his way over a triangular five mile course in two hours and thirty-seven minutes flat, Warren Anderson, of Sydney, N. S., led the ten finishers in the annual swimming race held Saturday on the Northwest Arm. Anderson had a long lead over T. G. Sheeher, of Halifax, who was second in 3:18.25. Gerlie Novak, Halifax was third.

Doris Gilroy, last year's winner, gave up at the two mile mark. Of the thirty-three starters, seven women and three men finished.

phone him, it would be just like Jack to call again and again. "Persistent head!" whispered Lila viciously. "How could I ever have thought I loved him?"

She knew now that something had happened to make him suspicious about the Ware ruse. The thought terrified her.

She would have been even more alarmed, if she could have seen Farquhar, grim of mouth, determined of eye, calling another telephone-number.

It was that of Dorothy's studio! It was that of Dorothy's studio! (To Be Continued.)

Chautauqua Here Next Week

Plans and methods of this year's Chautauqua campaign in preparation for the Three Joyous Days to be held here Wednesday to Friday, Sept. 26 to 28, were brought to a focus by the visit of Dr. J. A. Cottam, first advance agent of the Chautauqua, who spent yesterday in Charlottetown and met in conference with the committee in charge of the event and held special sessions with the local officers who are R. H. Rogers, President; Rev. Ross C. Eaton, Reception Committee; A. C. Duchemin, Chairman Hall Committee; J. T. Crockett, Chairman Advertising Committee; Charles Ross, Vice President; Ray Pendleton, Secretary; J. Lester Douglas, Treasurer.

Dr. Cottam stated that the program this year was fully up to the high standards set by former offerings and assured the ticket committee that they could offer their wares in entire confidence that purchasers would later thank them for not only an enjoyable, but a profitable three days.

The outstanding feature of this year's program, according to Dr. J. A. Cottam is the three act comedy-drama, "Take My Advice," a dramatic success from the pen of Elliott Lester. This play, Dr. Cottam said, ran for a whole year on Broadway and was rated as one of the season's biggest hits because it is clean, funny, and portrays situations familiar to practically everyone who sees it. Take my advice, said Dr. Cottam, and see "Take My Advice."

Besides this play by a competent cast, there will be lectures, music, entertainment and the special Junior Chautauqua features that have endeared this annual event to the hearts of the youngsters of so many communities.

Season tickets are still available at the Y. M. C. A.

Labor Party Re-enters Field

HALIFAX, N. S., Sept. 17.—Re-entrance into politics of the labor party as an entity in Cape Breton East stood out among today's developments in the political situation leading up to the provincial elections on October 1.

The endorsement of Forman Way and J. B. McLachlan by the Labor party at New Aberdeen saw the return to candidacy of one member of the labor group of four who were allied with seven farmer representatives after the Liberal victory in 1920. Mr. Way having been elected at that time.

There were no three cornered fights in 1925, when D. G. MacKenzie and Archibald Terris, Farmer-Labor members for Cumberland, supported Hon. E. N. Rhodes, the Conservative leader.

With the final nomination convention that called for the selection of Liberal candidates in Col-

WANT PAYER BOOK TAKEN FROM PARLIAMENT

LONDON, Sept. 17.—An attempt may be made to take the prayer book question out of the hands of parliament altogether, according to an article in today's issue of the Sunday Times. The article was written in connection with the coming meeting of the Bishops of Lambeth Palace, called to decide what action is to be taken in regards to the second defeat of the prayer book measure in the British Parliament. Stating that the possibility of securing amendments to the enabling act so that the church may settle its own domestic concerns through an assembly and convocation, the article says that a committee of statesmen and churchmen to prepare the way for this extension of privilege has been proposed by the prime minister.

ROMANCE AT EIGHTY YEARS.

ROME, Sept. 18.—An unusually romantic marriage, which took place this month at Pedagoggi, Sicily, has created considerable comment in Italy. Two octogenarians, Pasquale Salambro and Marianna Maramzano, children of the soil, were married in the parish church, where there was such a congregation as had never before been seen gathered together, while those who had come in from neighboring villages thronged the town to wish good luck to bride and bridegroom.

For sixty long years Marianna waited for her Pasquale to return from the distant city whither he had gone, a handsome young man, when Marianna's parents refused to allow them to marry. At last Pasquale came back bowed with his 80
