Man Who Has Given His Life and His Unopened Pay Envelopes to Support Family Deserves Glorious Reward—Must Man Decide Between Sweetheart's Health and Love?

Dear Miss Dix—Have you ever considered that poor fish (call him a sucker if you will) who is the victim of the unopened pay envelope? Way back in the Roaring Nineties, when men were men and women were glad of it, Romeo took his Juliet to the altar and then settled down to the task of bringing home the bacon in the form of the unopened pay envelope. Time marched on. The family came and grew up. Juliet, as wife and mother did great things in building up the home, educating the children to have a great opinion of themselves, while Romeo plugged on, his back bending more and his head hanging lower, like old Dobbin's.

Today, having given all to his family, he has no fat bank account, can't make a good fellow out of himself, is unable to provide a palace with two cars in the garage for his wife and children. He is only the "old man" and we see him by the thousands sitting on park benches with a tired, worried, Godforsaken look on his face, and to the passing throng he is just another of life's derelicts who gives the lie to the old saying that "true happiness comes from sacrifice."

Well, Dorothy, what about it, what do you think of it? Has he been a boom to the onward march of civilization or just a cog in the revolving gear of progress? Has he been a potent factor in building up that great American institution, the home, or just a convenient blot on the family escutcheon? Having been honest, lived clean, wronged no man or his daughter, isn't he worthy of a little consideration and some respect? Or should he be classed as a plain fool? ONE OF THEM.

Answer: Well, Mr. Man, if I had the bestowing of honors, I should pin on your breast the Distinguished Service Medal and the Croix de Guerre with palms and fixings and the Order of Merit that is bestowed on those who have had the courage and the grit to carry on in the face of great dangers and difficulties. And then I would fit around your bald head the very brightest and shiniest halo in the whole collection, and I should salute you as Hero and Saint.

For no soldier, no matter how daring the stunt he pulls off in battle, shows a greater valor than that of the man who fights the battle of life with a heart that never falters and who never even dreams of throwing down his arms and surrendering.

The soldier's deed of daring takes less bravery because it requires the steeling of one's courage but for a minute or an hour and is done in the delirium of excitement, with the thunder of guns in one's ears and with the world standing by watching and applauding, while the fight of the man who is just waging the battle of life for his family is done in silence and alone, in dingy offices and dull factories, with a body worn out with monotonous labor, and only too often with none to appreciate. And it is a fight that never ends. That goes on and on for years and years.

And certainly no saint ever achieved greater self-abnegation than the man who makes of himself a living sacrifice on the altar of his family; who slaves that they may spend; who goes shabby that they may have fine clothes and sports cars; who toils through hot summers and cold winters that they may have vacations; who works extra hours that his children may go to fine colleges; who is often so inconsiderate in the home he supports, that he has not even a chair that he can call his own or a hook in a closet.

Sometimes these brave, patient men who have brought home the unopened pay envelope have no reward. Their wives are so absorbed in the children that they do not see their husbands as men, still less as heroes and saints, but only as cash registers that they can punch to get the children everything they desire. Sometimes the children are arrogant and insolent and look down upon the father whose never-ending toil and sacrifice has given them the luxuries and advantages they enjoy. To them he is just the "old man" whose sole function is to sign checks and they never think of him as human or hungry-hearted or resentful of their ingratitude.

But often the man who has brought home the unopened pay envelope knows that with it he has made the best investment on earth; the investment that has made him rich beyond the dreams of avarice. For his work has kept the woman he loves and who loves him safe and warm through the years. It has reared children who are an honor and a pride to him and whose devotion repays him a thousandfold for all he has done. True, he hasn't any safety deposit vault filled with stocks and bonds. The money has gone into Children Preferred instead of Wild Cat Common, but it is a gilt-edge security that slumps in no depression and that pays a 100 per cent on the dollar.

I wish, Mr. Man, that every father, such as you have been, could see how great and glorious is the work he has done and how worth while. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—The girl I am engaged to has incipient T. B., and the doctor has ordered her to the West for a year to save her. She hasn't the money to go, neither have I to give to her. Another man has offered to send her and pay all her expenses. He wants to marry her. He doesn't ask her to love him. All he asks is that she be loyal. She has asked me to release her from her promise so she can marry this man in return for his saving her life. She thinks she can find contentment, but no happiness. Is there any way out for us? UNDECIDED.

Answer: I think the girl would make her sacrifice in vain if she married a man she didn't love while she still loves you in order to get the money to go

MUMMY, CAN I HAVE SOME MORE JELL-O TODAY?

YES, MY DEAR. I'M NOT SURPRISED YOU LIKE IT. THE FLAVOR IS BETTER THAN EVER. AND IT'S EASIER FOR ME THAN MOST DESSERTS BECAUSE THE NEW JELL-O CAN BE MADE SO QUICKLY.

A BIG IMPROVEMENT
5 minutes after making old-fashioned jelly powder even old JELL-O, good as it was!

West, because one of the factors in the curing of any disease is peace of mind and happiness, and certainly any woman would be in a most upset mental state and most depressed if she was battling with a blighted love affair and trying to school her heart to forget one man and turn toward another because it was her duty.

Anyway, most doctors now do not put much stress in climate in T. B. cases. They say that any fairly good climate will do, provided the patient lives in the open air, keeps quiet and has the proper nourishing diet, and that it is better for those afflicted with this malady to be at home with friends and family and be happy and satisfied than it is for them to be in a better climate where they are homesick and lonely.

A woman who is heart whole and fancy free may take a chance on marrying a man out of gratitude and for whom she has no affection, but the woman who is in love with some other man is bound to be desperately unhappy herself and make the man she marries miserable. It is always a disastrous thing to do for all concerned. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a widow very much in love with a man. Do you think if it is my fate I will get him or had I better go after him? MRS. X.

Answer: We make our own luck. Heaven helps those widows who help themselves to a husband. Go after your man if you want him. DOROTHY DIX.

For The Cook

Fruit Punch
3 cups orange juice.
1 cup lemon juice.
1 cup raspberry or loganberry juice.
1 quart iced water.
¾ to 1 cup sugar.
Blend thoroughly, sweetening to taste.

Gingerbread
1 cup brown sugar.
½ cup shortening.
2 eggs.
2 teaspoons ginger, or 1 teaspoon ginger and 1 teaspoon cinnamon.
1 cup molasses.
½ teaspoon salt.
1 cup sour or buttermilk.
1½ teaspoons baking soda.
Flour to make thick as ordinary cake batter. Bake in moderate oven.

Checkerboard Sandwich
Cut six slices of bread about half an inch thick, three of white and three of entire wheat. Spread one of the white slices with cream cheese or with one of the butters described in that division. Place a slice of entire wheat bread on this and spread with same or a different mixture, topping with another slice of white. Make another pile like this, except with two entire-wheat slices and one white, weight both piles lightly and set in the refrigerator. When firm and thoroughly cooled, trim and slice each pile in three slices. Spread these with same mixture as used before and combine slices crosswise, white and entire wheat squares alternating. Repeat weighing and cooling process for a few hours. When ready to serve, cut in thin slices.

A Morning Smile

The physician was giving an informal talk on physiology. "Also," he remarked, "it has recently been found that the human body contains sulphur."

"Sulphur!" exclaimed the girl in the blue-and-white blazer. "And how much sulphur is there, then, in a girl's body?"

"Oh, the amount varies," said the doctor, smiling.

"Ah!" returned the girl. "And is that why some of us make better matches than others?"

"Wanted, an expert carver. Only those used to first-class restaurant work need apply," ran the advertisement, and the man out of a job smiled.

"Well, what are your qualifications?" asked the restaurant manager at the subsequent interview.

"I have only one, sir," replied the other cheerfully.

"Let's hear it, then."

"At my last place I cut the meat so thin that when the door opened the draught blew the meat off the plates!"

"Right!" said the manager. "You're the man I've been looking for!"

Hats For Spring 20's Recall Gay Nineties

PARIS, Feb. 15.—Hats recalling the gay '90s, when society rode in victorias, were paraded today in an important modiste's salon as chapeaux for 1933.

A navy and blue straw had a low crown covered with white daisies. The brim was turned up in the back and down in the front and it was worn with a blue veil tied with a fluffy bow at the top of the crown.

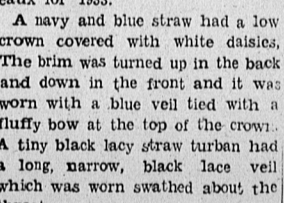

A tiny black lacy straw turban had a long, narrow, black lace veil which was worn swathed about the throat.

There also were new headgear: combining 1933 berets with 1893 flower trims. A navy organdy beret entirely covered with white flowers was worn with a matching flower-trimmed organdy scarf and organdy gloves having cuffs studded with white flowers.

Clothes shown by other designers displayed scant change in silhouette

The Double Act

A Romance of the Theatre BY MARION TOMLINSON

"I think I'd better ask if you are thinking of leaving me and Grenoble," Nell countered.

"And what should I do if I did leave Grenoble?" said Rosemary wearily. "I know too well how difficult it is to get a new shop. Besides, with the reputation Grenoble has made for me, I should only be offered another part like this one. Nell!" she added with sudden energy, "I think I'm beginning to hate my hair. Sometimes I think I'd like to shed all that part of me like—like a discarded snake skin. It stifles me."

Nell sighed.

"We have to accept ourselves as we are made," she said. "Think of all the women who envy hair you are so ungrateful as to despise."

"It's lost me everything I really care for," cried Rosemary fiercely. "It, and what has been done with it, have made the man I care for despise me. . . . No, Nell, I wish I'd never had it, or that I knew how to get rid of it, and have him instead. But that's impossible. I suppose I'll have to be thankful for what I've got."

This was the last time Rosemary and Nell talked of the thing that was in both their minds. But Grenoble had not forgotten his promise to bring the lovers together if it could be done, and as the run of "Berenice" came to an end he found the opportunity he sought.

It happened that the London theatre was at that moment in one of its periods of prosperity. So successful were most of the plays that a producer with a new piece found it almost impossible to find a theatre free to house it. Antony, therefore, with everything prepared for his play "Kinship," was waiting for a theatre.

Grenoble called the young man on the telephone one morning.

"One of the theatres in which I have a controlling interest will be free in about a month's time. I telephoned to ask if you would care to take an option on it," he said.

Antony replied courteously. He objected to Grenoble as a producer, but as a business man he was as willing to negotiate with him as any other.
