—WEDDING BELLS— A wedding of much interest was solemnized in Wellington United Church on Wednesday evening, Sept. 22, 1937 when Laura Mae Rice, daughter of Mrs. Alphonse Connell of Wellington, was united in marriage to Albert Stafford, son of Mrs. Emily and the late Captain Joseph Stafford of Maidstone, Kent Co., England. Rev. L. W. Parker officiated in the presence of a large congregation. The church was beautifully decorated by the bride's friends. To the strains of the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin the bride entered the church on the arm of her (step) father Alphonse Connell who gave her in marriage. The bride, who was dressed in white satin with conventional veil and orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of cream gladioli with maiden hair fern, was attended by her cousin Miss Lois McArthur of Arlington Lot 14. The groom was escorted by Mr. Wilfred Waite of Sherbrooke, P. E. I. After the ceremony the bride and groom and immediate relatives motored to the home of the bride's parents where a bounteous supper was served. Immediately afterward the happy couple went on a short honeymoon trip to points of interest on P. E. I. On Friday evening a reception was tendered them at their home by the members of the Young Peoples Union, The Women's Institute and their many friends. The many beautiful and costly gifts received all testify to the popularity of the young couple. Mr. and Mrs. Stafford will reside at Bayside, Grand River, P. E. I. A host of friends wish them every happiness along life's journey.

Fifteen Japanese heavy bombing planes attacked the extreme northern and southern portions of Nanking without inflicting important military damage, but 12 farmhouses near a Chinese airbase were destroyed and 10 peasants killed or wounded.

White Fox Life
Of North Ports
Trade Variable
BY R. K. CARNEGIE
POND INLET, Baffin Island, Oct. 21.—(C.P.)—As the wheat to the prairies so is the white fox to vast areas of the northern territory—the one big source of revenue.
And there's competition in the white fox fur trade. This year Pond maintained a precarious hold on the honor of being the greatest shipper of white fox furs in the Eastern Arctic despite the business lost to new posts in other districts. Some 400 pelts (last winter's catch) were loaded on R. M. S. Nascope when the ship stopped here in September. The trade in white fox brings an exceedingly fluctuating revenue for production goes in cycles. After reaching the bottom of the cycle in the winter 1935-6 the catch over the Eastern Arctic last winter was about 25 per cent greater over a long period shows the production steadily climbs for one or two years before it starts upward again. The slump is extreme, a lean year producing often not more than 10 per cent of a big year.
The common explanation for these cycles is the abundance or scarcity of lemmings. Little mouse-like animals on which the white foxes largely feed. These animals now and again start on a wild, inexplicable hike, often marching by thousands into the sea to their deaths. In any event when they are very scarce, approximately every five to seven years, the white foxes are scarce also.
In a good year Canada provides about 70,000 white fox furs. Pond alone has shipped almost 3,000 pelts in one season. If they averaged to the Eskimo and native trapper $12 a pelt it would bring into the country $840,000.
The present price for fox pelts in England, the world market, is a little more than $20. During the war they went as high as $40. Prices now, however, are higher than during recent years. They are in demand for the white opera wraps in which women rejoice.

Live Among Rocks
White foxes are found almost exclusively north of the tree line using holes among the rocks as dens in which they rear their young. Their coat is blue-grey in the summer blending with the rocks and white in the winter blending with the snow.
When the Nascope stopped at Fort Ross at the south end of Somerset Island in September where a new post has been built, the foxes, unfamiliar with humans, could be approached to within a few feet.
These little animals are lured to their deaths with traps baited with rotten meat or fish, their keen sense of smell attracting them considerable distances. Trappers often sprinkle perfume or Florida water on the trap with no bait at all with successful results.

PLAN GODWILL TOUR
(C.P. By Guardian's Special Wire)
MONTREAL, Oct. 21.—Dr. E. Ginebra, consul general for the Dominican Republic here, announced today four planes would make a 20,000 mile goodwill flight from Santo Domingo to Montreal at the end of December. The planes will visit Caribbean Islands, South America and the United States before coming to Montreal.

Canada Faces Seed Shortage
OTTAWA, Oct. 21.—Canada faces a serious shortage of clover and grass seeds for spring sowing which will necessitate considerable importation of seeds, the Department of Agriculture disclosed today. High prices are the rule and imports have already started to come in.
Extensive winter killing cut down Canada's seed production far below normal this year and carryovers from the previous year fell far short of making up the difference between 1937 production and the normal domestic requirements.
Preliminary estimates of the production this year have been compiled by the Department of Agriculture. They show shortages of red clover, Alsike and Timothy. The quality of sweet clover seed on hand is just a little short of requirements and there is a surplus of Alfaifa.
NEW YORK—Study of 250 boys and 250 girls, from five to nine by Columbia University, found the trend throughout was for mother preference except among girl's of five and six who showed a surprising bias towards father.

Presbyterian Young People Hold Rally

The young people of the Presbyterian Churches on P. E. Island held a rally day in Summerside yesterday. Mr. Reginald McNutt, retiring president, presided over the sessions which were held morning, afternoon and evening.
Mr. Andrew J. Jardine of Freeborn was elected president for the ensuing year. Miss Jeanie MacFadyen, secretary, and Miss Jeanette MacFadyen, Charlottetown, treasurer.

Lord Henderson, Charlottetown, was the principal speaker for the evening meeting. He stressed the importance of the evening meeting which was open to all other speakers were Rev. Mr. Foster, Marshfield; Rev. G. C. Webster, Charlottetown; Rev. Wallace Stadel, Belfast; Rev. Hensley Staveland, Wood Islands; Rev. Mr. McNeill, Mount Stewart; and Rev. Edwin White, Tyne Valley, who installed the new officers. Vice-presidents were appointed for each district.
The Summerside choir gave several selections during the evening meeting. There was a very large attendance. From all parts of the province, The ladies of the Summerside Church held their annual tea in the afternoon and the delegates joined with the local congregation in accepting the hospitality of the ladies.

SANCTIONS
sufficient force to make it effective.
"We cannot go alone," Sir Archibald added. "The country that must lead must be the United States which has immense interests in the Far East and with our preoccupations in Europe. But I do beg the government to make it clear that if the United States will act then we ought to stand by them and act with them."
The Prime Minister said it would be a mistake for Britain to go to Brussels to talk about "economic sanctions, economic pressure and force."
"We will go there to make peace, and the first thing we have to do is to see what concerted effort can be brought to bear in order to bring about a peaceful solution of that problem," he declared.
He said he understood Mr. Attlee was suggesting an economic and financial boycott of Japan. In that case, Mr. Chamberlain said, "you must bear in mind that if you are going to do that, you may be the counter-action by Japan and you must be assured beforehand of sufficient force to enable you to overwhelm that counter-action."
Mr. Attlee prompted this reply by stating he was convinced Japanese economy was extremely vulnerable and that a show of firmness would end the invasion of China. He asserted that economic pressure on Japan would no more bring war than did the Nyon Conference on piracy in the Mediterranean.
An embargo on oil, Mr. Attlee said, would certainly end Japan's aggression.
Refers to League
Taking up a charge by Mr. Attlee that Japan would not have embarked on her Chinese adventure had Great Britain been by the League of Nations, the Minister said the League "as it is at present is not a guarantee against aggression and, pending rejuvenation of the League, and the League's development into an effective instrument, it is no use simply going on repeating 'we believe in the League.'"
"We have got to find a practical means of restoring peace in the world," he declared.
The Prime Minister said he believed in the principles for which the League was founded, but that the League of Nations was not the powerful nations as originally visualized, and that it was not effective in the present crisis.
As had Mr. Eden earlier, the Prime Minister cordially welcomed Italy's move in regard to volunteers and held out a hope that once the Spanish question was eliminated the powers would be able to get down to discussion of the deeper and more serious causes of European unrest and anxiety.
He said the opposition had suddenly taken refuge by throwing doubt on the sincerity of Italian moves.
"In the present case," he added, "what happened yesterday seems to be full justification for the patience and persistence of Mr. Eden during these long drawn out negotiations."
Replying to opposition questions, Mr. Chamberlain said the government would not consider any arrangement satisfactory or acceptable which would allow volunteers to be poured into Spain while nominally others were being withdrawn.
It had been suggested that even if all went well regarding withdrawal of volunteers, when the war was over Italians might be found still in Spain and still in possession of some of the Balearic Islands and other ports which might be used for military purposes.
"These are very serious suggestions," the Prime Minister said. "I do not under-rate them for a moment. I know the idea that the Italian Government had some such notion is widely held and not only

Good Showing of Canadian Fruit

(C.P. By Guardian's Special Wire)
BIRMINGHAM, Oct. 21.—The appetizing glow of a Canadian orchard has been transferred to the Dominion's attractive booth in the Imperial Fruit Show which opened here today.
A gale which swept Nova Scotia has been given as the reason for a drop in entries in the competitive class from 90 last year to 71. However the quality of fruit from the competing provinces—British Columbia, Ontario and Nova Scotia—and the exhibiting province New Brunswick is said to be as good if not better than before.
The Canadian booth shows a wide range of varieties from McIntosh Reds to Golden Russets. Canada has another entrant in the big fruit show. From the Okanagan Valley comes Mrs. Isobel Stillington to take part in the Empire apple packing competition.
Rivals for the prize of £25 ($124) are packers from England, Australia and New Zealand. This competition—staged in periods on each day of the show—is not only judged for speed, neatness, attractiveness and correctness are also taken into consideration.

Britain's chief concerns in the Spanish situation are to "localize this war and to watch over British interests," Eden declared.
"There will be no indifference on the part of our Government where it is clear that vital British interests are threatened," he said. An outstanding British interest was maintenance of "our imperial communications through the Mediterranean."
