ST. JOHN GIRL'S STRANGE FLIGHT

ST. JOHN, Nov. 22.—Six weeks ago Irene Cormier, the thirteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cormier, 2 White Street, disappeared and since then nothing has been seen of her by her parents. On the morning after her disappearance the grief-stricken mother found a letter under her door. The address on the envelope was in a strange handwriting, but inside, on a piece of paper, was written in a childish hand: "I have gone home with this lady and have a good home at last."

The girl, who is one of a family of three sisters, was attending Centennial school. On the afternoon of October 14, she went to school as usual with a girl friend, but at the conclusion of the session she failed to return to her home, and none of her classmates now what became of her. The family came here from Campbellton some time ago, having lost everything there in the fire.

Miss Cormier will be fourteen years of age next March. She is rather slight, tall for her age, with dark complexion and dark hair and eyes, and is quite good looking. When she left for school on October 14 she was dressed in a blue print dress with white spots, trimmed with a lighter blue, and wore a black and red stocking cap and button boots. The police were notified of the disappearance and they have been working on the case ever since, but without results. The opinion was freely expressed yesterday that the matter should have been given publicity weeks ago. Had that been done it was said, the girl might have been found before this.

THE MODERN WOMAN

I cannot wear the old gowns I wore six months ago; I'd make myself a laughing-stock, I'd be a holy show. They measure two yards 'round the hem, A yard's sufficient now; I cannot wear the old gowns And look right, anyhow.

I cannot wear the old gowns, Although they're neat and trim, And, though they make me look a little slim, I must be yet more slim. The skirts that seemed so narrow then Now seem to me immense; I cannot wear the old gowns, I'd look like thirty cents.

DOES JAPAN LEAD IN WIRELESS (From the American Review of Reviews)

Japan has taken up the matter of wireless communication with the same insight and zest that she has done in the case of most other facilities pertaining to modern progress and achievements. So rapid has been the development made by her electricians both in invention and in installation that "it is a question whether in some important respects she is not now ahead of more pretentious nations." At least such is the opinion of the editor of The Japan Magazine.

Speaking more in detail of Japanese progress in the field of wireless, this writer says that the Japanese first began to take a serious interest in the possibilities of wireless telegraphy as early as 1886, when the noted electrician Dr. Shida, set up an apparatus of his own construction on the banks of the Sumida River, Tokyo; but his attempts to send messages across the water by means of electric waves were not wholly successful.

After European scientists began to publish the results of their investigations as to the nature of electric waves, the Japanese electricians turned again to the subject, and this time with greater promise of success. Dr. Nagaoka and Dr. Mizuno, of the Engineering Department of the Imperial University, Tokyo, now commenced an exhaustive course of investigation and experiment with some very encouraging results. In 1897 Dr. Asano, of the electrical section of the Department of Communications, Tokyo, set up a wireless telegraphic apparatus on the old forts in the Bay of Tokyo, and attempted to exchange messages with a station erected on the reclaimed land at Tsukijima, near the mouth of the Sumida River. In the meantime the great Marconi was going on with his wonderful experiments in Europe; and about 1895 he perfected his apparatus to such an extent as to have considered a decided success, having patented in England in 1896. Although the Marconi system was quickly taken up in Japan, the nation's own inventors and scientists did not cease their investigations and experiments, especially the electricians of the Department of Communications.

The Japanese, we are further informed, freely admit they have learned much from Marconi and other Western inventors. They have, however, perfected a system of their own. This system, known as the Teishin-sho system, is adjudged one of the most complete on record. Naturally the new invention became a matter of immense importance to the Navy; for all the navies of the world were now installing wireless telegraphic apparatus on their ships, and Japan could not afford to suffer the disadvantage of being left behind. But she did not deem it a great advantage to have just the same system as that employed in Europe. Accordingly, many electricians got to work and with the assistance of these connected with the Department of Communications, a special system for use in the Imperial Japanese Navy was perfected and adopted by the fleet. The code used by the Department of Communications was not regarded as guaranteeing sufficient secrecy for naval use; but the new system invented for the Navy, known as the Kalgun-sho, enables the fleet to preserve absolute secrecy as to position and message, and is believed to be more scientifically perfect than that used by any other of the world's navies. This secret system, which owes its existence and efficiency largely to Professor Kimura, was used by the Japanese Navy with telling effect during the war with Russia, indeed, it was by this means that, unknown to the enemy, Admiral Togo was able to receive warning of the approach of the Baltic fleet and be in readiness to meet it when it came in sight, its every movement being known to him up to the moment of its appearance on the horizon. It is hardly too much to say that in that greatest sea fight of modern times, Japan owed her victory in a large measure to the perfection of her system of wireless telegraphy. This statement is made on the authority of the Japanese themselves.

Nerves Are Sore and Painful

Neuritis, or inflammation of the nerves, is the most painful of nervous ailments. You may feel the soreness or tenderness throughout the body, or it may be confined in certain nerves. In the head it is called neuralgia; in the hips and legs, sciatica; in the face, tic douloureux, and in the chest, intercostal neuralgia.

The application of dry heat affords relief from the lance-like pains, but the essential thing is to build up the exhausted nervous system by the persistent use of such a restorative as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You will have other symptoms to warn you of the depleted condition of the nervous system, and this is your opportunity to restore to the body the energy and vigor of health.

While this great food cure is instilling new vitality into the starved nerve cells it is also forming new, firm flesh and tissue, and, by noting your increase in weight, you can prove beyond doubt the benefit of the nerves, and it is the only way to obtain lasting benefit.
