The HOUSEWIFE and HER ACTIVITIES

THE WAY Who seeks for Heaven alone to save his soul... May keep the path, but will not reach it so easily...

SANTA CLAUS GOES MODERN Straight from the toy factories has come this story of the new thrills Santa Claus is planning for Christmas, 1934.

There will be electric trains with extreme streamlines and real chuggers. A metal loom which reproduces, for the first time, the perfection of industrial weaving.

Miniature greenhouses with drainage and ventilation systems... Doll houses, even in the lowest price ranges, blossom with electric lights and door bells that work.

Express wagons have knee action, streamlines and balloon tires, just like grownup models. Knee action penguins and complete assortments of fawn and circus animals set a new record in agile tricks.

A new sound jerking set will turn the playroom into an efficient drug store fountain. Grocery stores come complete with counters, scales, dial phones, a safe with combination cash register and an efficient dial typewriter.

Children's books combine drawing and painting activities with the mastering of the alphabet. Baby dolls that suck from a nipple and breathe like real, live babies are a new play thrill which Santa Claus will bring to 1934 Christmas trees.

Patricia Collins, of Aldershot, Eng., the daughter of a general in the Queen's Bays, has picked some thrills into her young life. She is only two and a half.

One day she was carried out to sea by a wave when paddling at Southsea. She was rescued by a bathing machine. The second day she was riding on the path of a runaway horse near her home in the married quarters at an Aldershot barracks.

On the third day with other children she fell on the running-board of a car which suddenly started to move. She fell off and a wheel went over her, fracturing a leg. Pat is now in hospital, while her parents wonder what will happen to her next.

Tricornees are developed in many variations and manipulated with rolled or draped treatments so that a youthful character is achieved, while the matronly, dignified aspect is retained.

There are small tricornees with close-fitting silhouettes, and there are larger marquisette types draped in three definite points. One of this style has a cord crown band and tassel hanging from one side.

Little ostrich tips are also placed in the corners of the hats, and are larger marquisette types draped in three definite points. One of this style has a cord crown band and tassel hanging from one side.

To give new interest to conservative types for women, attention is given to brim manipulation with side or back rollings. Crowns, too, are folded, or dented, or allover tucked or stitched for novelty, and in one sports model with folded crown a colorful quill is placed along the top of the crown.

Health really is the keynote of winter beauty. You can use creams and lotions to lubricate and protect the skin. (Incidentally, you should) but if you want to be lovely, you must guard against colds and a run-down, tired, physical condition.

Nothing is worse for the complexion than a cold. Aside from the fact that your nose gets red and your eyes look swollen, you'll notice sallowness and a dragged-down appearance. If you value your beauty as well as your health, take special care not to get a cold. You need an adequate amount of sleep, for instance. When you feel the slightest soreness in your throat or a heavy, uncomfortable feeling in your nose and head, plan to get nine hours sleep each night for a week. Drink two glasses of water a day and watch your diet. Naturally it's a good idea to see your doctor.

Don't forget to take some exercise. If you don't walk, ride or go to a gymnasium regularly, do set-ting exercises in the morning. They stimulate circulation and help the digestive tract to function properly.

If you take a warm bath in the morning, finish with a cold shower. Wear warm clothes, of course, but be sure they're loose and comfortable. Coat sleeves that are too tight, a dress with an uncomfortable neckline and gloves that pinch the hands can make you more tired than you realize.

Get plenty of fresh air during the day and sleep with the windows open.
