MOSQUITOES PREY ON MAN HELPLESS IN JERSEY SWAMP

NEW YORK, July 11—With his features swollen from mosquito bites almost dead from thirst, hunger and exposure, Aaron Kennedy, 21 years old, of Clinton, N. J., was found unconscious in a swamp four miles west of Caldwell, N. J.

F. G. Jordan, Souris, is Guardian representative, and all news, advertising and subscriptions in Souris and vicinity should be handed to him.

Lumsen of Murray Harbor has again this year contracted with Wm. McIntyre and others of Montague to freight strawberries across to Pictou in his gasoline schooner.

The young man was found accidentally, when he was found by the boys of John Erskine and Edward K. Leis.

Kennedy is now in his home in Clinton, and the physicians in attendance say it will be weeks before he will be fully recovered.

When Kennedy left his home in Clinton last Thursday morning he neglected to say where he was going.

The swamp extends over a large area and is covered in places by grass three feet high.

Kennedy tried to retrace his way through the puddles of stagnant water, but proceeded only a few steps when he was compelled to sit down because of his pain.

He had to hack the leather to pieces before he could free the injured foot.

When he did so, it swelled to three times its natural size and he could not stand on it for an instant.

The young man spent hours bathing his injured ankle in the swamp water without getting any relief.

Drugging himself over the marshy land on his hands, he gathered bits of dry grass and weeds and kindled a fire.

JOHN McLEAN & SON, Montague

DRINKS MARSH WATER.

For hours he had been longing for a drink, but was afraid to take the blackish water around him.

He dipped his fingers in a stagnant pool beside him and bathed his lips with the poisonous water.

He could see lights, but they were dim, and he was unable to tell from which point of the compass they shone.

He tried to move his naked foot, but the pain in his ankle was excruciating still, although his entire body had a sense of numbness.
