"KLIM helps make the best Rennet-Custard you ever tasted!"

Says Elsie, the Borden Cow.

KLIM RENNET-CUSTARD RECIPE

1 package "Junket" Rennet Powder
 1/4 cup KLIM
 1 pint cold water

Make Rennet-Custard according to directions on package, dissolving Borden's KLIM in cold water by beating with an egg beater. If "Junket" tablets are used, follow directions on package.

With KLIM Powdered Whole Milk you can make your Rennet-Custard richer, creamier, more nourishing!

Because KLIM, you see, is whole milk in concentrated powder form. Only the water has been removed! Nothing added!

With KLIM you can make creamier soups, tastier puddings. KLIM can be used in any recipe that calls for milk. You can give your family more milk nourishment in many tempting ways. And that's important especially for children.

Get KLIM at your grocer's (or drug store) and for FREE "Fortified Diet Recipes" write The Borden Company, Limited, Spadina Crescent, Toronto 4, Ont.

In Memoriam

In fond and loving memory of a dear husband and father, William J. Halliwell, who departed this life May 22nd, 1942.

God called him home, it was His will. But in our hearts we love him still. His memory is as dear today as in the hour he passed away. We often sit and think of him when we are all alone. For memory is the only thing that grief can call its own.

Fondly Remembered by Wife and Family.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of my dear mother, Mrs. Dan MacLean, who passed away May 21st, 1941.

Dear is the grave where my darling Mother was laid. Dear is the memory that shall never fade. Sweet is the hope that again we shall meet. Kneeling together at Jesus' feet.

Ever Remembered by Daughter, Margaret Matheson and Grandchildren.

In Memoriam

MRS. FLORA ANN MACLEAN. There passed peacefully away on April 28th, 1947, in Boston, Mass., Mrs. Flora Ann MacLean of Ocean View, P. E. I., in her 80th year. She leaves to mourn Angus L. and Marywood MacLean of P. E. I.; Mrs. Holmes and Mrs. Murray of Boston, Mass.; also Margaret L. MacLean, Nurse, of 44 Revere Road, East Weymouth, Mass.

HE KNOWS BEST

Out of our life a light has gone and yet we know If in the darkness God's Dear will be done. 'Tis better so. If in our loneliness, we look to him we need not fear For Love will light the path that else were dim. If he be near. Though he has taken what to us He gave, I bless him still. Through all of life this boon alone we crave to do his will. For he knows best, and his enduring love will never fail. All else is fleeting and will one day prove of no avail. O, my Beloved may this heart of mine cling unto thee Be then its master that it may be Thine eternally. O, give us what thou wilt and take away what thou has given. But Dearest Lord, Be mine on Earth, I pray, and mine in Heaven.

Beal-Endersby Wedding in Westmount

(Montreal Star 17th)

Spring flowers and ferns decorated St. Stephen's Church, Westmount, for the wedding taking place this afternoon at half-past three o'clock of Miss Betty Ethel Endersby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Endersby, of Westmount, to Mr. Robert Stewart Beal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Beal, also of Westmount. Rev. A. T. Love will officiate and Mr. E. Tait will be at the organ with the choir of the church in attendance. Attending the bride as maid of honor is Miss Grace Stanger, while Miss Wanda Bennett, cousin of the bride, will be bridesmaid. Mr. Alan Brown will be best man and Mr. Douglas Waterston and Mr. John Harvie ushers.

Given away by her father, the bride will wear a floor length gown of broad satin made with a sweetheart neckline and long sleeves ending in points over the hands; her finger tip veil of tulle illusion. She will carry a bouquet of Talianum roses.

The maid of honor is wearing a floor length gown of gold taffeta with shoulder length veil of orchid tulle illusion, her bouquet of mauve sweet peas. The bridesmaid will wear a floor length gown of Wedgwood blue taffeta and a shoulder length veil of pink tulle illusion, her bouquet of pink sweetheart roses.

Mrs. Endersby, the bride's mother is wearing a street length dress of navy blue crepe, a white hat and a corsage of pink roses; Mrs. Beal the bridegroom's mother, in a street length dress of powder blue sheer, is wearing a grey hat and a corsage of sweet peas.

A reception will follow the ceremony in Victoria Hall. The bridal couple will go to the Laurentians for their honeymoon. The bridegroom, a graduate of McGill University, has just completed his second year at the United Theological Seminary in New York. (Mrs. Beal, the groom's mother was a former Charlottetown resident.)

Masters Of The Parachute Mail

By Peter Benedict

"We don't—except, of course, that no one is mad enough to come alone and unarmed into the enemy camp if the police are anywhere within call. Not even for your dear Gray, my child, would you do that. And you are nearer to being a fool than our American friend, believe me."

"Still," said Kirk, infected with Corrie's malaise, "it's true enough that time's short. We have to get on with the tide—and we want no daylight on the job. What are we waiting for?"

"For Jean-Pierre; and we shall continue to wait, until he comes; as, in different circumstances, we should have waited for you. Remember that!"

"If it was anyone but the frog, I'd be remembering it. But I just he's made his own getaway, and left us holding the baby; it would be his drop."

Mere Colibri said, without emotion: "I have just about ten times more reason for trusting Jean Pierre than I have for trusting you. He said he was coming with us; therefore he'll come."

"If he can," thought Peggy, with a spurt of joy, thinking of the police cordon round the Green Scorpion and Sabel's shop, where doubtless Monsieur Chacquet was busy clearing up the evidences of his trade; if, that is, he was not already, as she hoped and trusted he was, in custody.

"In the meantime," said Mere Colibri, "where did you say you captured our very quiet friend?" nodding at Peter, who continued to look as dazed as he could, while his head cleared, and his strength collected itself for the moment.

"Right on the edge of the moor. The girl must have been up there with them, and heard the cars—or else missed him, and scented trouble."

"Well, it does not matter," said the old woman. "What matters is Jean-Pierre. I said we would not go without him; I have never left any man of mine in the lurch, and I don't intend to begin now. But I did not deny that he was late. In the meantime, what are we to do with these two? If Jean-Pierre has done away successfully with all the papers and the goods at the club, and our two over-curious friends should vanish, with insufficient evidence to explain how or when—in fact, with no bodies to show for it—I fail to see why we should not continue to live on the fat of the land—for a year or so. I grant you, some other land—afterwards, here once again. What evidence is there against any of us, without these two very valuable young people to give it?"

She yawned, and smoke issued in blue curls from her mouth; Jean-Pierre was reminded again of the salamander rather than the parrot. She looked at Peter; he had his hands over his face, but between the fingers his eyes were bright, and one of them closed quickly as she looked.

"Well, what is it to be? The cellar? It has its advantages, but there is always the possibility that some stray bit of evidence would justify the police in applying for a search warrant in our absence. Or the river? No, the river is conducting a positive traffic in that sort of fish. I refuse to be hatched. I propose that we take them with us upon our little sea voyage—alive. I regret—but corpses are a little difficult to carry about, even in the small hours. Then—sea burial—judiciously weighted, of course. They need not rise—not, at any rate, until the sea gives up its dead. If it is ever so thoroughly indiscreet. However," she said indifferently, "it's your right to have an equal say in it with mine. The results affect you equally with me."

Peter thought of Peggy sewn in a sack with a hundredweight of scrap iron. He hoped she was not thinking of the same thing; but a glance at her revealed no change of colour, no apparent distress. He supposed it was still a little fantastic to her that anyone human could look upon anyone else in that completely objective way. He looked, too, at the revolver in Graham's hand. It hung slackly now that his attention was held; but still the lax hand was expert, and
