SANDRA THE JEALOUS

By Jane Phelps

SANDRA VISITS THE ATTIC CHAPTER XLI

When I thought of Everett and Leola I wondered if ever I should be able to take her place in his affections, his thoughts. I longed inexpressibly to have him forget her. Had he written me a nice loving letter, I should have had no wish to do any slight thing that might displease him. But to be practically a prisoner, to be allowed no freedom of thought and action, simply because the woman he had loved, still loved, had abused both, was unbearable.

Almost unconsciously obeying him I went early to my room. But after re-reading the cold letter dooming me to the days of loneliness save for recreation of his choosing, I began to sob because of his neglect—not of me, but to love me.

"I hate you, Leola! I hate you!" I cried childishly, clenching my fists. "I never shall stop hating you—never so long as I live. What beasts men are! Everett married me because I reminded him of you—these all say I am like you. Well, will he like you, I'll do. I'll do things to worry him you used to do. Perhaps he'll love me if I do."

I sat down in front of my dressing table. I pushed back the hair which clustered about my forehead. I looked steadily, fixedly, at the mirror. I must talk, must confide in some one. So I talked to myself—confided my secrets to the girl in the mirror.

"I think he must dislike me," I moaned. "That's what makes it so hard. That awful Mr. Leveridge said he married me instead of Irma Barton because I was young, and more likely to bear him children."

"I love babies, but I won't be made to have them when my husband doesn't love me, but loves a dead woman." I felt sick, faint, at most suffocated.

I took her picture down from the wall, handling it gingerly. Then held it up so that our faces were close together. Yes, there was a certain similarity of profile, of features. Her hair grew close around her forehead in clusters, curls just as did mine. I had been told so often that the color was identical. I could imagine it on the picture face instead of the dark wavy mass of the camera.

I was overstrung, mentally un-nerved with passionate anger to wretched Everett. Rage and disappointment over his letter, struggled together with my love for him. My eyes were filled with scalding tears as I rose and prepared for bed.

"Where are you, Everett?" I sobbed. "And are you thinking of her, Leola, instead of me? I'm your wife now! You haven't any right to be thinking of her."

So I felt as tears trembled on my lashes because of the love my husband bore his first, his "other wife" as people spoke of her.

In the morning the sense of loss was still with me—loss of love, and of consideration. I drank my coffee but could eat nothing, which seemed to worry Mrs. Gray. I usually had a healthy appetite, no matter how unhappy I was; but Everett's cruel way of disposing of my time of me, had hurt me as much if not more than anything he ever had done.

"It isn't any use!" I said aloud as I returned to my room after my attempt to eat. "It isn't any use trying to be nice to him and make him love me. He just thinks of the other woman, that Leola, and loves her while he treats me like a child."

Mrs. Gray went out during the morning, after advising me to do the same. But I refused, pleading a headache. After she left I flew to her room. Perhaps I could find her keys and so get into the attic with out any trouble. I can't even now tell what I expected to find, why I was so obsessed that something was hidden there. That it had some relation to Leola, I also felt sure.

I found the keys upon Mrs. Gray's table in her sitting room. After I had tried them nearly all, I found one that seemed to fit the lock. But it turned very hard, as if the door had not been opened in a long time. Finally the key turned and the door came open. I hurried up the stairs carefully closing the door behind me. I did not want Hetty to know where I was. Mrs. Gray had said she would be gone some time. I would put the keys back before she returned. But no one would know I had been rummaging.

"I haven't the right to do anything in my own house," I grumbled, as I looked rather fearfully about the big attic, filled with pieces of furniture and trunks.

Tomorrow—A Disappointing Search

TWO YOUNG MEN WERE BADLY INJURED.

ST. JOHN, Aug. 14.—A serious accident occurred at the turn of the Rothesay road, near the Torryburn station, late last evening, when an automobile driven at a moderate rate of speed by Graeme Paterson, was overturned, and Mr. Paterson and John Moore, were painfully injured. Mr. Moore was plucked under the car, and his chest was badly crushed. He was unconscious at 3 o'clock this morning. Mr. Paterson was unconscious for some hours after the accident, but it is believed that his injuries are not serious.

As the two young men were alone in the car at the time of the accident the exact cause of the overturning of the car could not be ascertained, but it is supposed that it skidded in taking the turn.

Disappointment to Some Canadians

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Several Canadian officers doing administrative duties here have received a letter from Canadian headquarters informing them that their names was submitted to the departmental chief for an order of the British Empire.

"I am, however, advised," the letter proceeds, "that a resolution has been passed by the Canadian government who have submitted a memorial to His Majesty praying that no further honors be granted the Canadian personnel, and in these circumstances no action can be taken to advance my recommendations."

Many recipients of this letter openly express deep disappointment at being denied "the bit of ribbon," and point out that many officers who also discharge at the earliest moment, but id administrative duties took their deserved decorations before the memorial to the King was submitted.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—Demobilization of the military organization built up in France during the war is proceeding, and when it is completed the organization will be the same as in 1914, before the outbreak of the war. The French army, if present plans are not changed, will comprise the twenty ne corps of 1914 and two corps created during the war.

The three army groups and the independent armies which made up the French military organization at the end of hostilities has been decreased until the army group of General Payelle, the armies of occupation commanded by General Mangin and General General respectively, and the army of General Gouraud in Alsace are all that remain. The army commanded by General Mangin will be maintained in the Rhine provinces in compliance with the provisions of the peace treaty.

In the peace army the twenty-one army corps will have their headquarters in the same city as before the war, except in some parts of the devastated district of Northern France.

BELGRADE, Aug. 14.—The war has made Serbia a country of orphans. There are two hundred thousand persons who lost both their parents and three hundred thousand more who lost one parent, according to statistics compiled by Red Cross workers from records in the Serbian educational department. Some towns of one thousand inhabitants have between two thousand and three thousand orphans.

Secret Treaty Was Kept Concealed

WASHINGTON, August 12.—Existence of the secret treaty between Japan and Great Britain regarding the Shantung, China, peninsula was "concealed" from Secretary of State Lansing by Viscount Ishii, Japanese Ambassador to the United States, Mr. Lansing testified today before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

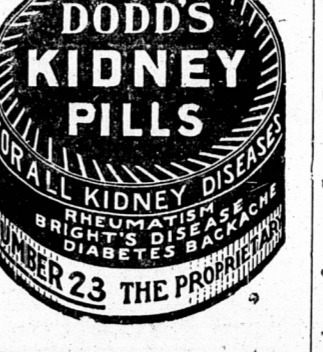

On September 6, 1917, Mr. Lansing said, during the negotiations leading up to the Lansing-Ishii agreement, Viscount Ishii told him that he had assured Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Minister, that Japan would return Kiaochow to China, "but would have to retain the German Pacific Islands because no Japanese Government could stand without retaining them."

The Secret Treaties. "Did Viscount Ishii make any further statement regarding the disposition of German claims in China," asked Senator Borah, Republican, Idaho.

"No," replied Secretary Lansing. "But you know now that at that time Japan had an understanding with Great Britain for Japanese control of Kiaochow, and that Ishii concealed that from the Secretary of the United States."

"That's the truth." The Secretary said he first heard of the secret treaties on the subject between Japan and Great Britain, France, Russia and Italy, in February of this year at Versailles.

He said he had investigated "very thoroughly" and that these secret treaties never were published in Russia.

Live Poultry Wanted!

TO FARMERS, POULTRY RAISERS AND MERCHANTS:—

We are prepared to buy Live Hens during the next few weeks until weather becomes cooler, then we will buy large quantities of Dressed Poultry of all kinds. Hens are usually fattest when they cease laying and just before moulting, and the moulting season is near, therefore you should cull your flocks now, thereby saving feed and labor of dressing your fowl.

We will not buy chickens until further notice or by special arrangement. Good prices will be paid for best quality and all Poultry will be bought on quality basis, therefore it will pay you to sell your best and fatten the poorer ones to sell later.

All poultry will be graded and correctly weighed promptly on arrival at our Warehouse, and cheques issued in payment immediately. Ship (by Express preferable) in lots of twelve or more, not later in week than Thursday.
