CHAPTER 68.
THE ATTACK

CYNTHIA never afterward understood how she managed to remain so cool and collected in the ensuing panic about the train. Women were hysterical; children cried; men were wild-eyed, hotly disputing the advisability of this course and that.

"We can't stay here," one man near Cynthia was shouting, though he did nothing toward remedying the situation. "We're directly in the line of fire. Feng-Yu-Hsiang is behind us with an armored train. He's trying to get through in the way we make, and it's he and not us that Li-Ching-Lin's attacking. Why don't you do something? Why don't you?"

Cynthia lost the rest of his heated tirade, because the woman in next seat fainted. Cynthia searched in her bag for smelling-salts and applied them with successful results. A child of about two years stumbled against her knees, weeping and forgotten by a hysterical mother. Cynthia gathered the baby into her arms and soothed it.

"I'm sure they won't hurt us," she said to the fainting woman who had now recovered consciousness and added that illogical phrase that is constantly heard in foreign lands: "They can't do anything to us—we are Americans!"

The men rigged up a sort of barrier at the rear of the car by wrenching seats ruthlessly from their standards, and commanded the women and children to sit on the floor behind this screen.

"You'll be safe, if shrapnel hits the windows again," they said. One man said to Cynthia, who was still holding the child: "There's an ingenious chap aboard—he's been in another coach with some Frenchmen—who rigged up an aerial on the baggage car and has managed to report the attack to Tien-Tsin. We may get relief soon."

"I'm glad there's one man on board with a head," thought Cynthia. "Is he French?" she asked. "No, an American, I believe," Cynthia smiled triumphantly.

After a time, the train began to move slowly backward. This occasioned a chorus of questions and a fresh panic. Cynthia was becoming weary of the Chinese war. She mentioned the fact to her neighbor.

"Not much hope of dining, I understand we were to have picked up a fresh supply of food at Tien-Tsin, but there's no chance now." Cynthia was silent at this discouraging news. After a time, there was a fresh burst of shrapnel and the train stopped again. Most of the men left the car to investigate this new demonstration. When Cynthia's informant came back, he said, shaking his head: "That fool who rigged up the wireless has gone ahead with a little party of Frenchmen and a bag of rice to find out what Li-Ching-Lin's intentions are. He must be mad."

HOSEA PREACHES GOD'S LOVE (The Story.)

God is a mirror of the heart of God one sees in him not the ugly face of a cruel and capricious deity which a current superstition pictured, but the countenance of a Father. Nowhere outside of the New Testament is the ideal more perfectly delineated. It was in Hosea's word, the Father who called Israel out of Egypt. It was the Father who taught the child Ephraim to walk, encouraging him by praise, directing his successive steps, catching him at the points of falling, and finally when he was nearly taking him up in his arms. The leading-strings of love were about the child. He was "drawn," not suddenly held up or pulled. Like a humane master, God lifted up the yoke, he eased it to prevent its galling and removed it, when the time to spread food came. When offered medicine for his ills the child in his impatience did not know that it was intended for healing.

When the dread termination of the parental relation by the sinful willfulness of the child came the heart of the Father was wrung with anguish as he cried "How shall I give thee up?" The emotions of love and pity are kindled into a blaze. God in mercy will stop short of the punitive judgments which the nation deserves. He will not inflict the vengeance which a man would, under similar circumstances.

The Divine monologue continues, "I will heal the hurts which Israel's falling away have given him. My love shall be free. It will not cost him anything in the way of sacrifice." The dew is the saving of Palestine. It is the substitute for rain during a long season. The Israelites would understand the full significance of those words "I will be as dew upon Israel."

There was no dinner, and a fresh panic ensued when it was discovered that the supply of water was alarmingly low. Shrapnel had struck the tank and the precious fluid was slowly seeping into the thirsty sands.

For the first time, Cynthia heartily repented her rash action in attempting the "trip to Shanghai alone. She wished herself back in her luxurious suite at the Pekin Hotel, with Norma. She wondered whether Basil Harcourt had returned from his pilgrimage to the temple.

But here she was, marooned on a cold, sandy Chinese plain, with fighting ahead of her and behind her, without food, or water, or heat, without a place to lay her weary head, and with a strange child clinging to her hand.

Finally she took the child in her arms and walked down the corridor. The dust in the coach was stifling, and, after a moment's hesitation, she went out on the platform.

and the whole nation shall go into a captivity from which there shall be no return... To reconcile the remediless destruction which the prophet affirms with his "restoration" paragraph is confessedly difficult. The solution is found in the prophet's own conception of Jehovah, Israel's fallen son, true, but God is a forgiving Father... The Prophet who knows the fatherly heart of Jehovah and in his own domestic sorrow, has learned the possibility of reclamation, sees the "Valley of Trouble" converted into a "door of hope"...

THE GOOD AND BAD IN NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES

An eccentric old man had a habit of pausing before the post office in a middle Western village, and saying in a solemn way "The Post Office is a great institution." The same address could be made before any newspaper's office. There is romance and miracle in the growth of the daily printed sheet from the first crude issues to the present, in which forty-thousand an hour can come from an Octopus rotary press, printed, folded and cut with pictures inset in texts. But even more surprising than mechanical production is the almost instantaneous gathering of the news of the world and the editorial commenting upon the same. If as the late President Eliot thought the Post Office an educational institution, what shall be said of the function of the Press in the training of the moral and intellectual faculties of the masses? It is a crime against society which this power is perverted for the sake of mere commercial gain.

DAILY READING:
Monday—Newspapers as heralds—Isaiah 40: 1-11.
Tuesday—Newspapers as interpreters—Job: 2: 1-3.
Wednesday—Amos as Cartoonist—Amos 7: 7-9.
Thursday—Newspapers that corrupts—1 Cor: 15: 33.
Friday—The Short Story—Luke 15: 11-32.
Saturday—An editor's prayer—Psalm 26: 1-12.

TO THINK ABOUT:
What good things have you noticed in the newspapers?
What service are good magazines doing?
How can we tell the good from the bad in magazines and newspapers?

OFFICERS ELECTED FOR WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE UNION

On October 31st, 1927, Mrs. Gordon Wright, National President of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, met in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, about seventy-five delegates from local Unions all over the Island.

The meeting was called for the purpose of forming a Provincial Organization to be known as the "Confederation Provincial Women's Christian Temperance Union of Prince Edward Island."

After the usual opening exercises, Mrs. Wright addressed the delegates at some length, on the principles and work of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, emphasizing some of the departments such as "Scientific Temperance Instruction," "Evangelism," "Y Work," "Loyal Temperance Legions," etc.

Rev. A. A. McLeod was called upon to close this part of the meeting, after which the Charlottetown Ladies served tea.

SICK ABED EIGHT MONTHS

After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Could Do All Her Work and Gained in Weight

Melfort, Saskatchewan.—"I had inward troubles, headaches and severe pains in my back and sides. I was so sick generally that I could not sit up and I was unable to do my work for eight months. An aunt came to visit and help me as I was unable to attend to my baby and could not do my work. She told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking two bottles I could get up and dress myself. I also took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine. When I first took the medicine I only weighed seventy-eight pounds. Now I weigh twice as much. If I get out of sorts or weary and can't sleep I always take another bottle of the Vegetable Compound. I find it wonderfully good for female troubles, and have recommended it to my neighbors. I will be only too glad to answer any letters I receive asking about it."—Mrs. WILLIAM RITCHIE, Box 486, Melfort, Saskatchewan.
