THE KLONDYKE OF THE EARTH

A Common Blue Clay that Rivals Clay.

Wealth of the God Fields has come to Petersboro, England, Without the Hardships—Simply Inexhaustible.

There is a district in Peterboro which is called Klondyke. That is its postal address, and it is aptly chosen, for the ancient city has found hidden in the earth on which it stands a treasure inestimable. It is not gold or diamonds, merely a common blue clay, but by the alchemy of modern science it is transmuted into the precious metal of our currency, and the wealth of the gold-fields has come to Peterboro without the hardships.

FELT THE EFFECTS OF OLD AGE

But has been wonderfully helped by the invigorating influence of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Strength wanes at the approach of age, but you can do much towards keeping up vigor and vitality by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mrs. Sarah Gill, 254 Euston Street, Charlottetown, P. E. I., states— "As a natural consequence of increasing age I was beginning to feel run down and felt that I needed something to tone up my system. I procured a box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and can say that I found it a most excellent medicine. I have used several of Dr. Chase's preparations and always found them very beneficial. I consider Dr. Chase's Nerve Food the best nerve and general tonic I have ever used."

making of England, and taken an active part throughout the centuries in events which shaped the nation's life. But it was virtually saved from obscurity in modern times by a foolish Marquis of Exeter, who, when it was proposed to run a great line of railway through Stamford, set his face against such a desecration of his broad acres. Peterboro had no such prejudices, and it gained what Stamford lost, and became a busy centre of trade. Two thousand railwaymen live in Peterboro, at this day in a colony of their own, and with the aptness for nomenclature which seems native to the district, it has been called New England.

But even better fortune was in store for the city. In the regions round about Oxford clay approaches the surface, and lies in great beds covering a wide area. It is grey and blue in shade, and has a certain oiliness, as of shale. Over it a layer of plastic clay was found, which was made into bricks, and lumps of this substance appear in the Oxford clay, giving the semblance of knots in wood. So at this day a hole whence the clay is out is a "knot-hole."

Fletton, on the outskirts of the city, is in the centre of the clay fields, and "Fletton" is the trade name of the Peterboro brick. The clay deposits are literally inexhaustible. Their superficial area is of many square miles, and the depth varies, but is always great. Depths of 115 feet of clay have been proved, and the local feeling is that men may dig for ever in these regions, and still find the pay dirt. It is soft and easily workable; the oil in it facilitates combustion, and lessens the coal bill in firing; it can be made by the dry process, very simply and expeditiously. The London stock brick, so called, is made laboriously, and is weather-dried; and the process is slow. The Peterboro brick is made more cheaply, with less labor, and has the advantage of being absolutely true and regular in shape, so that setting can be done more quickly.

About 20 years ago machinery to deal with this clay came into use, and Peterboro has grown because of the possibilities thus opened out. Today there are some 30 brickyards in the district, and 2,000 men are employed in the industry. Klondyke is the name of the newly built district in which many of them live. Eighty tall smoke shafts raise their heads, and if they were set on end they would ascend over two miles into the sky. One of them alone contains 140,000 bricks, and they stand to all travelers in the east as an indication and advertisement of the astonishing growth of an industry which now commands an invested capital of a million sterling.

Estimates of the product of this industry vary, and it is impossible to decide between them. One puts the annual produce of the 30 yards at 500,000,000 bricks, or a million and a half a day; others say that the produce is probably 800,000,000 bricks, and that 500,000,000 of them go to the London market alone. For the new War Office in Whitehall 25,000,000 of these bricks have been required.

The work is very simple and easily described. The clay makes an uninterrupted and rapid process from the knot-holes to the wagons in the railway sidings at the doors of the kilns. In many yards the steam digger tears the clay from the beds 150 pounds at a time; the filled trucks are drawn by power to the mill, where the clay arrives in soft lumps. One steam digger does the work of twelve men; each of the machines for manufacture does the work of hundreds of men. No hand touching it, the clay is tipped into a mill, where it is reduced to powder; then it passes by an endless traveling belt to the floor above the presses, where it falls into the hoppers of the machines. The mould is filled, a pressure of 100 tons is applied, and each revolution of the machine produces one or more bricks, truly and regularly shaped. In this way a machine makes from 30,000 to 50,000 bricks a week. These they pass to the kilns, which hold some 350,000 to 400,000 bricks for the firing. Twenty days pass in this delicate process, and each brick loses in that time two pounds in weight.

And thus the work goes on continuously, and Peterboro now claims to have the busiest and biggest brick-field in the world. Nor is this merely a passing boom. One acre of clay 100 feet deep will yield 80,000,000 bricks; so that at the higher estimate only ten acres of clay are consumed in a year. There is clay enough to serve many generations, and enhance Peterboro's prosperity. Having made great progress in the last two decades, the clay Klondyke of the Fens looks forward confidently to a bright and smiling future.—London Chronicle.
