A Holiday In London And Vicinity

board her. How different from her last voyage three thousand years previously when the Egyptian slaves floated her on the sunlit Nile for the delight of Pharaoh! Eventually the Cleopatra's crew are saved and the tug watches her drift away. . . . Sixty days pass and then news is received that Cleopatra's Needle was tugged into Vigo by a ship whose owners received two thousand pounds for their services. Eventually, tugged by an M. P.'s yacht the Egyptian stone arrives in England.

"Here forty-seven years ago, they placed it beside a cold, grey river, and some unknown hand penned the following epitaph to it in the morning:—

"This monument as some suppose Was looked on in old days by Moses; It passed in time to Greeks and Turks, And was stuck up here by the Board of Works."

"Sad cold stone—the saddest monument in all London. We are killing it. It was once red granite. Now it is coal black and its glory is being eaten away year by year. Forty-seven years of London have done it greater hurt than the three thousand years that went before. It did not deserve this; for round it centres the splendour and glory of the past and under its feet is a message for the future."

EROS

Owing to the reconstruction of Piccadilly Circus, Gilbert's beautiful and graceful statue of Eros (Love) has been removed to the Victoria Embankment (1925). This removal has caused much discontent to those who frequent this part of the city. Many are demanding its restoration to Piccadilly Circus as soon as the remodeling of the latter thoroughfare is completed. Eros was surrounded by a fountain and it was here that the old time Flower Girl took up their positions. Mr. Morton has entertainingly written a sketch of what used to be in this locality, entitled:

"THE GIRLS"

Even as I write, Piccadilly is changing. Eros, attended by the ghosts of undergraduates, has stepped from the pinnacle, thus evacuating the post of honour from which he has gazed upon the follies of our fathers. . . . So before the circle has squared, which seems quite unnatural, I wish to write about the flower "girls." Early in the morning, long before the first pair of silk stockings had been sold in Regent Street, the "girls" dipped their violets in the Fountain and camped out on the steps. What a perfect picture they brought! . . . In the spring they made the first real news to the West End with their laughing primroses, big tight gold bunches of them; and the Fountain was a joy to behold. "Violets pennigabunch."

"That was, of course, long ago. I believe they are sixpence or more now; but the old cry from the Fountain has been remembered all over the earth wherever men have thought of Piccadilly."

The flower "girls" of Piccadilly presented to London the most marvelous study in polite indifference. Here they were in occupation of the very centre of the world, with the feminine beauty and elegance of every country before their eyes. They were the only women in fashionable London circles who did not care a hang for the changing mode. They had sold violets to women in bustles; they had seen skirts sweep the ground, they had seen the dawn of the leg from the hobble skirt to the knee skirt. Never once in their history did they show the instinct of their sex to imitate.

These middle-aged women who are always "girls" have become international. American women said: "Why, they're just sweet." French women thought they were almost chic, and sometimes a grey old man . . . would wander up from the direction of Pall Mall to buy a buttonhole just to hear himself called "dearie." . . . That was Victorian London.

"When I heard that Eros was to disappear and that the "girls" were to be moved away, I had the same kind of shock that a Roman under the Empire might have suffered if a friend had moved his thumb in the direction of the Palatine Hill and had remarked: "Have you heard? The Old Man's sacked the Vestal Virgins!"

Preposterous! The "girls" were our vestal virgins—they kindled each day a memory of a fast vanishing London.

SERIOUS ILLNESS OF DAIRY SUPERINTENDENT—It is with regret that The Guardian chronicles the continued serious illness of Mr. J. A. McDonald, Provincial Dairy Superintendent. Mr. McDonald's condition was rendered most serious by a stroke of paralysis recently.

REPRESENTS MARITIME PROVINCES—Mr. Peter Brodie, York, prominent farmer and stockman, leaves this morning for Regina to attend the Dominion Association of Swine Breeders, as representative of the Maritimes. This is the eighth occasion that Mr. Brodie has had this honour.

WILL UNITE SERVICES—Owing to the continued indisposition of Rev. Mr. Fulton, Zion and St. James Churches will unite their services tomorrow. Rev. R. M. Legate, B. D., will conduct services in St. James in the morning and in Zion in the evening.

ADDRESS ENJOYED—The Knights of Columbus Hall was filled to capacity Thursday evening with an interested audience who listened with rapt attention to an interesting lecture on "The Philosophy of Life" by Rev. Joseph McGree, C. S. S. R. Hon. C. G. Duffy occupied the chair and introduced the lecturer. At the conclusion a hearty vote of thanks was moved by Mr. M. A. Farmer and seconded by Mr. James Coyle. Before and after the lecture pleasing violin solos were rendered by Miss Kathleen Hornby, accompanied by Mr. Walter McNutt.

I found one in Piccadilly the other day. She had taken up a stand on a street refuge, from which she could command sight of her former pith. "No, dearie," she said, "Piccadilly's gone to the dogs, strite it 'as. Life ain't what it was, nor never will be again with this squarin' of a place what was meant to be a circus. It ain't right. Who'd 'ave thort we should leave the Fountain—ever. Some says we can go beck there when they've done messin' it about, but I don't believe it. I'm Mrs. Wise—I am. They ain't no green in my eye. . . ."

"And this job ain't what it once was—not by arf. No, dearie! In the old days every kebbie 'ad 'is buttonhole, and no gent was dressed unless he 'ad one, too. And the drivers of the old horse omnibuses! They were rare customers—nice, pleasant men, too, who like to pass the time of day with you and talk. Now there's no time for talk or flowers!"

She nodded enigmatically.

"Young men don't like to be seen carryin' flowers today, but I can tell you their fathers didn't mind—and better men they were, if I'm any judge of a man, and I ought to be, seein' I've been sat in Piccadilly Circus all me life. . . ."

Then she said something that sent a chill to my heart:

"My gels ain't going to waste their lives sittin' here. I can tell you. Emma's going into pickles, and Maud, she's in millinery."

This, of course, is the end! A flower girl's calling is hereditary. It descends through the distaff side. The next generation of "girls" are it appears, going into commerce, and there will be none to follow on.

It is sad. If I were a millionaire I would subsidize them and buy a hansom cab and an old pensioned cab horse to stand there too.

For in the fret and change of these days the flower girls of Piccadilly looked so permanent with the surge of London round them, the crowds from the ends of the earth, so indifferent to change, so typical of an easier day, as they sold their flowers in that whirl of gladness and sadness, beauty and ugliness, which is the heart of London. . . . the heart of the world.
