WHEN IT WAS REALLY COLD.

Ink Froze to Pens and Boys to Wet Lapstones In Those Days.

The ancient art of keeping warm in blustering winter weather was crude as practiced by the forefathers or Judge Sewell would not have complained that he was slow in recording events in his diary because his ink froze upon his pen. Nor would the colonial shoemakers have many times decided that it was too cold to make shoes, but just right to go hunting. The test of temperature was made by allowing an apprentice to sit on a wet lapstone. If he was frozen to it the weather was considered too cold to work.

Indeed, just how the people of the cold parts of this country got any comfort during the severe winter days is not apparent to the eyes of today that have looked upon the simple and curious heat producers of early times. A rare collection of these ancient fireplaces, andirons, stoves and other promoters of mercurial rises is preserved today in the Essex institute in Salem, Mass., together with much interesting information thereon.

One of these curios is a fireback from the ancestral home of Colonel Timothy Pickering, Washington's friend and secretary of war. It is of slate and looks like a gravestone. It was carved with the Pickering family crest. It was placed in the back of the fireplace, so that the burning logs would not set fire to the house.

These old fashioned fireplaces were huge affairs. Children could sit in their corners and watch the sparks chase each other toward the stars. The fireplaces and chimneys were first lined with mud, so that they would not burn, but later they were made of brick. It is a common remark that in trying to get warm at such the faces of people were roasted from the heat, while their backs froze in the drafts from the cracks in the windows and doors.

But the early forefathers were a hardy race and endured the cold wonderfully. The Puritans of Salem refused to heat their meeting houses, declaring that warmth therein "was a snake of ye wily and wicked Satan." The sturdy Puritan sires and their sons kicked their heels together when the cold stopped the circulation of their blood, and the preachers often patiently paused in their two hours' discourses to wait for everybody to become warm and stop kicking.

Women carried little foot stoves to church. These were perforated tin boxes about a foot square, into which hot embers from the family hearth were placed, and the hot stove was then taken to meeting along with the Bible.

Coal was known as early as 1637 in this country, and it was called "iron stone." But wood was far cheaper and more convenient and was most used. Peat was also utilized, as it could be obtained from many bogs.

Stoves were introduced as early as 1652, and in that year the general court of Massachusetts granted to John Clark 10 shillings for every family using his valuable invention, a stove, for a period of three years, and this grant was subsequently extended for a period of Clark's lifetime, the general court being deeply grateful for the comfort derived from his invention.

The first open front coal stoves were designed by Benjamin Franklin and were cast by James Byres & Co. in Springfield, Mass, in 1787. Franklin probably got his idea from the German stoves used in Pennsylvania. These had a hot air drum, which extended to the second story and warmed that part of the house, but the doors of many of them were outside the house, so that it was necessary to go outdoors to feed them with fuel. Franklin's invention marked the beginning of stoves for burning coal and wood which are in general use today.

These early stoves were as great blessings to the forefathers as are steam heaters today. Even the poets sung of their virtues, referring to them as "stoves which autumn of winter could make."

But today the practical man wants summer of winter made, and the various simple devices of the forefathers—the firebacks, andirons, open fireplaces and crude stoves—have been thrown into the junk heap or into the museum to make way for the modern hot air and steam heaters.—Boston Globe.

Royal Household Flour Yields Most Nutriment.

Only when flour is absolutely pure do you get highest nutriment and least waste.

Purity in flour is secured only by the highest development of the science of milling, and the makers of Royal Household Flour have developed milling to the highest point of perfection in this country.

The Royal Household Electrical Purifying and Sterilizing Process is the most thorough in the world—it is controlled exclusively in Canada by the Royal Household Mills—and that is why Royal Household quality cannot be duplicated in Canada.

That's why Royal Household Flour is the richest in nutriment, greatest in purity—That's why it is the flour every family should use—the kind that gives the sweetest, best flavored bread and most toothsome pastry.

If you want that kind of flour see that you get Royal Household, then send for the recipes so that you may use it in the Royal Household way.
