When Death Rode In From The Sea

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. Dec. 13.—(By E. A. Jeffery, Canadian Press staff Correspondent)—Through... generations of wrestling a living from the sea and knowing instinctively how to deal with its varying moods, the fishermen of the south coast of Newfoundland have become almost immune to any sense of danger. They strive with the storms and derive the same pleasure from their victories as the members of a team from their's on the football field. When they lose out as not infrequently happens, they take their defeat stoically, and reckon the lives which the sea takes as the toll which some time or another must inevitably be paid as the price of the harvest from its depths.

Home from the ocean in their humble dwellings, they have come to believe, even though the billows roll in within a few feet of their doors, that safety is their's unquestionably. Ashore the game was over; they were no longer looking for trouble. On Monday, November 18th they had fought a storm all day. As darkness came on they made for the shelter of their coves. Their boats had been made snug and their gear stowed away when the solid earth trembled and their houses were shaken to their foundations. Never had such a thing happened before. There was uneasiness everywhere, and while they were still asking each other what could have been the cause, another shock, more violent than the first, intensified the alarm. Darkness only added to the terror of this unknown thing. Some said an earthquake; others believed that the end of the world had come. The telegraph office, their one connecting link with the outside world, could obtain no reply to enquiries apart from near-by settlements.

Then came a message from St. Lawrence—"My God! the sea is coming in." Burtin, the chief settler on the coast, had just received it when a wall of water was seen bearing down upon the town. Coming with the speed of an express, it gained in height as the funnel-shaped arm of the bay compressed the onrush. There was no time to warn people whose homes were in the landwash. The turmoil of the water caught them, lifting some of them bodily and crushing others into a mass of splinters.

WOULD PUNISH PARENTS OF DELINQUENTS

LOWELL, Mass., Dec. 12.—Parents of delinquent children would be punished if Joseph L. Cronin, chief probation officer, had his way. "The boy or girl in juvenile court," he says, "is there partly and sometimes chiefly because of lack of proper parental supervision. Because of the natural desire of the parent to supervise the child, the laws have left this important duty to the parents and have not provided any method of punishing parents who neglect such a duty. At present time, a parent can only be brought before the court for aiding and abetting delinquency, and it seems to me that there should be a law which would provide punishment for parents who fail to exercise such supervision over a child that would prevent the child from straying into violations of the law. We seldom it ever hear of a parent brought into court to explain why his offspring has been engaged in violation of the law."

ORIGIN OF SURNAMES

MacWalt.
 Son of Wat or Walter. Clan and tartan, Buchanan.—G. D. P.

Mann.
 A very ancient name, difficult to derive. One derivation is from the Gaelic mathgamhain, "the bear," hence Mahon, Maghan, MacMahan, &c. Second from Old English Mann "vassal, servant, hero." Third, from the Isle of Man. Hundred Rolls has Henry le Man. There are twelve Man and Mann crests.—G. D. P.

Methven and Methuen.

This name originated from Methven, which is in the Glenalmond district of Perthshire. In 1211 Methven, 1250 Methphen, 1500 Mechwynn. Possibly derived from Magh (moch) abhunnin (wynn, "plain of the river" (Almond). Lord Methven was a title in the Peerage of Scotland conferred in 1528 by James V. on Henry Stewart, second son of Andrew, Lord Ewaldale afterwards Lord Ochiltree, a descendant of Robert afterwards Lord son of Robert III. The barony afterwards passed into the possession of the Dukes of Lenx, and was purchased from them by William Smythe, Esq., and now belongs to a family of Cox, Jute manufacturers, of Dundee. General Methuen's family is a cadet branch of the old Perthshire Methvens, descended from a Methven who became Chancellor of Ireland. The Methven and Methuen crests are the same—"a wolf's head crested proper." Methven motto—Fortis in arduis "Brave in difficulties." Methuen motto—Virtus invidie, "Virtue a mark for envy."—G. D. P.

Rattray.

This name comes from the lands of Rattray, near Blairgowrie. In 1291 Rofre, 1291 Rettef, 1305 Rofhtref. The derivation is probably from the Gaelic rath, "a circular fort," and tairidhe (pron. tory), "hunter or outlaw," thus meaning "fort of the hunter or outlaw." The ancient Castle of Rattray is presumed to have been built on a still more ancient fort. Clan and tartan—Murray.—G. D. P.

Ray.

Also Ray and Rae. These are diminutives of Macrae, which in Gaelic is MacRach, "son of Grace or Luck." Clan and tartan—Macrae.—G. D. P.

Sanderson.

Son of Sandy or Sanders, for Alexander. Clan and tartan—MacDonnell of Glengarry.—G. D. P.

Service.

This is a Sain name from St. Servais, which I think is one of the many forms of St. Serf. Probably of Norman-French origin where the name Cervus is found. G. D. P.

STANLEY IN PORT—The C. G. S. Stanley arrived in port yesterday afternoon after lifting buoys in the Caribou Channel at Picotou Island. Members of the crew state that the steamer had to break her way through the ice all the way from Picotou Island to Charlottetown. Hillsborough Bay is completely caught over with bay ice from Governor's Island to St. Peter's Island, a condition which came as a surprise as there was no ice there when the Stanley left port Tuesday. A number of the buoys in the vicinity of Picotou Island were caught in the ice, and one of them dragged the distance of three miles despite the fact that it was anchored to a heavy granite block. All the buoys taken into port by the Stanley were encrusted with ice.

SANTA CLAUS' VISIT—Santa Claus arrived back in town yesterday on his weekly inspection tour of Holman's Charlottetown Toyland and from two to four o'clock was "at home" to the kiddies big and little, and say, you wouldn't think there were so many children in the whole of Charlottetown as greeted him. He was extremely busy these two hours shaking hands with the little tots and hearing their requests for what they'd like—Santa to bring them. He is going to try and see that everyone is remembered and feels that the older folk will help all they can as he will be so very busy this Christmas. He was quite surprised what a hole was made in his stock of toys at Holman's Toyland but says that there will be plenty for all and wants everyone to see that he is not neglectful of any. He will shortly announce his next and last visit to Holman's Toyland for this year.

LUXURIOUS HOME PICKED IN LONDON FOR SOVIET ENVOY

LONDON, Dec. 11—Gregory J. Sokolnikoff, new ambassador to Great Britain from the Soviet government, may live in a style far from the ordinary conception of Communistic simplicity.

Russian officials were said to be considering giving him the magnificent and luxurious Sunderland house in Mayfair, an exclusive residential section of London, as his residence while in the city.

Sunderland House was built by W. K. Vanderbilt at a cost of more than $2,500,000, and presented by him to his daughter, Consuelo Vanderbilt when she married the Duke of Marlborough.

look in his travels and then their special care will be the handicapped children under Red Cross supervision. For these the members are busy making toys, Christmas stockings, mitts, scarfs etc., having fine box collections and imposing gifts for those who break the health rules so that there will be something on hand for the littlest ones, unable to make their own gifts, to purchase them and share in making Christmas the happiest day in the year for some unfortunate child.

Child Prodigy Asks Annulment Of Her Marriage

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—(B.U.P.)—The Supreme Court of this highly democratic country went in to possibility in the grand manner today when, in separate actions for annulment of marriage, a countless complained that she had found her husband erring, and a court's wife complained that she had found her husband living.

The second case involved Miss Winnifred Sackville Stoner, at one time most publicized of "child prodigies" who, not only born with a full set of teeth, could converse in polysyllables at the age of one year, passed a college entrance examination at nine and was graduated from a university at 12.

In a more mature year, when she was 16, Miss Stoner met and married the Count Philippe Clinton de Bruch. That event took place in Greenwich, Conn., on Aug. 7th 1921. Subsequently she was informed that her husband had been killed in a motor accident near Mexico City. In 1925, Miss Stoner, believing herself a widow, married Louis Hyman, a wealthy middle-aged sportsman. She divorced him on August 15th, 1927.

Today in a petition for annulment, Miss Stoner asserted that she learned the Count is still alive and is, in fact, now in New York.

The other annulment case was a hearing before Supreme Court Referee Burr, of the suit brought by the Countess Shack Gracie de Urbina, daughter of the former Danish ambassador to Sweden and the United States. The husband, Humberto Aguirre de Urbina, was at one time a Spanish translator in the local customs house.

LETTER OF SYMPATHY

Mrs. J. C. Haslam Dear Sister:—We the members of Union Division No. 45 wish to extend to you our deep and hearty sympathy in the great sorrow which has recently come to you in the removal of your mother. We sympathize with you in your loss, yet we rejoice with you in the knowledge that her departure from this life was but going to the Home beyond to receive the treasure which she laid in the Father's house, that inheritance not made with hands eternal in the Heavens. We pray earnestly that in this your hour of trial and grief the God of all grace may sustain and comfort you until you meet again in that land where "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain for the former things are passed away." Signed in L. P. and F.

LETTER OF SYMPATHY

To Wellington and Thomas Haslam, Dear Brethren: We the officers and members of Union Division, No. 45, wish to extend to you our sympathy in the loss which you have sustained in the death of your dearly beloved brother William. It being the will of your Heavenly Father to remove him may seem baffling to you and all of us now, but that which is not clear to us now shall be in the hereafter and in the better land we'll read the meaning of our tears. We therefore trust that while your hearts are heavy in sadness, you will all look to Him who doeth all things well and look forward to that bright and cloudless morning when the dead in Christ

GOLD BEATING A NECESSARY ART

British United Press

LONDON, Dec. 9.—The craft of gold beating is among the oldest of the ancient arts practised in this country, and one in which England still holds pre-eminence. Except that girls have now entered this industry there have been few changes in it since the master craftsmen of former days beat the gold that glided the finery of medieval kings.

The art of gold-beating is necessary for the production of gold leaf, which consists of strips of gold of infinitesimal thickness, used for all kinds of gilding.

Gold brought from the refiners is melted down, poured into an ingot and then flattened and rolled in special mills, coming out in the form of a ribbon 1-4 inches wide and about one-thousandth of an inch thick. When this has been thoroughly cleaned of any oil it is cut off into small 1-4 inch squares.

When it is realized that each of these squares, already only the thousandth part of an inch thick, has to be hammered until it makes sixteen leaves of gold, each five inches square, some idea of the amazing dexterity of each sheet and the wonderful dexterity of the work can be obtained.

There are three objects, resembling small books, known as "moulds," "shoder" and "cutch" the leaves of the first two being made of gold-beater's skin. The 1-4 inch squares are first placed into the cutch and hammered until they attain the size of the cutch (about three inches square). They are then taken out cut into four and placed into the shoder.

Once more they are hammered until they are the same size as the shoder. Again taken out, they are once more cut to four, so that the original tiny squares have now become sixteen in number. Yet again they are replaced, this time into the moulds, and by the time the last hammer is done the gold leaves are completed.

The whole process of hammering takes many hours and infinite care and patience are required. Craftsmen reap their reward in the knowledge that British gold leaf is universally admitted to be the most enduring and finest in the world.
