CURSE O' LOVE

A Story of Love and its Test
by MILDRED BARBOUR

CHAPTER 20.
THE REJECTED SUITOR.

With King Carson's departure, Norma felt infinitely happier. She admitted she had been jealous of him. She wanted Philip all to herself, and unreasonable as had been her resentment against sharing him with a friend whom he hadn't seen in years, she had not been able to overcome it.

Now she was alone with Philip, except for her father's sometimes trying presence. But she knew that many of his fables grew out of a mistaken sense of devotion and a passionate desire for her own happiness, as she overlooked them. The foundation for their new home, at the opposite end of town, was already being laid, and the plans, carefully, but tactfully, expurgated by Philip, were in the hands of the architects.

It seemed to her that the last faint cloud that had darkened the horizon of her honeymoon days had receded into the distance.

Under the spell of her perfect love, she bloomed with a new beauty and sweetness. Philip Kendall, watching her, felt himself being swept away by a renewed and ever-increasing passion. He almost began to wonder how he, knowing that she loved him, had been down-hearted over the mere matter of a few thousand dollars.

To have her was enough.

And yet he was peculiarly inarticulate. He found his love too big and poignant to put into words. He had not King Carson's ready gift of expression. It was his nature to be reserved, just as it was Norma's to be shy, a little afraid of her husband and her new estate. Even now, they failed to understand each other completely. Each was afraid of ... cynical about the obvious change in her social status. She was grateful—but there was nothing in her simple, unaffected manner of receiving these salutations to suggest that she was in the least flattered by them. She acknowledged them with a pleasant bow and a smile, but offered no further encouragement to those who seemed to want to join her, or to ask her to share their table.

Just as she was about to leave, a young man strode into the shop and crossed directly to her.

"I saw you from the street," he announced abruptly, and seated himself without waiting for permission.

Norma's clear cheeks flushed, and a little, annoyed sparkle came into her blue eyes. The man was an employee in the bank at which her father did business.

"Really, Sydney, you're as sudden revealing the depths of his own emotion and his dependence upon the other for happiness.

"Little by little, Norma, wrapped in her new wonderful happiness, lost touch with her former world. Old associates—there were not many—were forgotten. She lived only for Philip and her father.

One afternoon, when she was shopping downtown, she dropped into a little tea-shop that she had formerly patronized. It was crowded with the elite of the town.

As she dawdled over her muffins and tea, it amused her to note the number of bows and smiles she received from smart women who had scarcely noticed her heretofore. Marriage with Philip Kendall had done that for her!

She was too innately sweet to be

ZINC AND LEAD PRODUCTION INCREASING IN CANADA

Dominion now ranks among World's Biggest Producers of These Minerals Which are of Great Importance to Industry.

(Canadian Press)

VANCOUVER, B. C., Sept. 15.—Zinc and lead are important features of the Mining industries of the Dominion and the situation in regard to them was reported on in an optimistic strain by T. W. Bingsay, Comptroller of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company and Dr. F. J. Alcock, of the Canadian Geological Survey, at the meeting of the Empire Mining and Metallurgical Congress here today.

Production of both metals in Canada has steadily increased during recent years, until today the Dominion ranks among the world's important producers, with an output approaching if not equalling that of Australia, the Empire's other chief source of these metals. It is confidently expected that during the next few years success in both these lines of activity will further increase Canada's lead and zinc output, giving her a still higher ranking than at present among the world's producers. There is one producing zinc mine in Quebec and some lead mines are operating in Ontario and in Yukon Territory, but the bulk of Canada's lead and zinc has always been obtained from mines in the interior of British Columbia, where the Sullivan is now the largest zinc and lead mine in the world. The ores from this and other British Columbia mines are sent for refining to Tadanac, B.C.

In 1926, approximately 140,000 tons of metallic lead was produced from ores mined in Canada, and of this 125,000 tons was refined at the Tadanac plant. During the same year the production of metallic

CHILD ENDOWMENT IN NEW SOUTH WALES

A new act entitled the Family Endowment Act came into operation in the State of New South Wales in July, writes Commercial Agent B. Millin, Sydney, in the forthcoming issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal. A child for the purposes of the act means a legitimate child. The head of a family, who is earning an amount equal to the basic wage has just been declared—that is 4 pounds 5 shillings per week—is entitled to claim 13 pounds a year (6s per week) for each child in his family if, however, a man is earning more than the basic wage he is entitled to claim for only so much endowment as would bring his income up to the level of that of a man on the basic wage drawing endowment for a similar number of children to his own. The fund will be provided by employers of an
