There Are Limits...

On what a magazine, a radio or daily newspaper can convey to you in news form because of curtailed time.

Whereas: a Weekly Newspaper analyzes in detail the happenings and occurrences, both local and foreign in one single edition. It contains interesting facts that concern you... your locality... and acquaintances. Such a thorough news digest is embodied in the "PIONEER" and "ISLAND FARMER", where timely editorials and editorial opinions appear; breaching bargains offered by local merchants; a Woman's page of up to date fashions and recipes; as well as Sporting Events. The "ISLAND FARMER" as its name suggests, contributes one full page to farm improvement plans through sage advice and interpretative illustrations.

Both of these outstanding Papers can be obtained at less than the cost of a postage stamp per week. Upon receipt of your name and address accompanied by the small subscription fee of $2.00, we will add your name to our growing list of subscribers.

ELLEN'S DIARY

sea-weed that was wont to come in green and wet once upon a time on a full tide, a gift from the deep to the farmers along a well remembered stretch of Strait shore. Grey and white and black it became later, a tawdry mixture when drawn to a heap on the bank and left to the ways of drying suns and winds. And delightfully scented and soft for a small one to nestle in, when loads of it were carried home then to be used as a bedding in summer sites.

I recalled too the green of the dark hulls of the ships, that with white sails billowing drew into safe haven at a land guarded harbor near. I tried to recall the names of these, named for a wife or sweet-heart but most of them had slipped from memory in the intervening years. These were the sleekable, and beautiful ships, that in Autumn and Fall took away the farmers potatoes to other ports—the blue one, dug perhaps from the shore, fished carefully and taken not in sacks but a bulk of them in a farm-wagon. And sometimes a few of the red variety were tucked away in the hold, or the pinkish-white ones. And the bit of money received expanded it with care, or with better fortune hoarded for future needs. I should like to have named our craft for one of those boats, if a suitable name of them had come to mind. "We'll just have to call her the Sea Gull," I said to Jamie. "But we can't call her that," Jamie replied "for if there's any birds that I don't like it's those gulls. In Spring they scream and make too much noise altogether — no well not call her that." So at our launching attended by all of the family except Carolyn and her young son, there could be no christening of the boat. For the present she is nameless.

Nicely modelled and neatly built, James meticulous as always can find no fault in her construction. She was fashioned by one, in a shore district, the name of which hearkens back to pioneer days. He is one who understands the ways of tides and boats and such things as pertain to the deep, and knowing, is a good craftsman. Time was, so the older folk of our community would once tell, when this district boasted ship-building yards, where staunch, comely, craft were built that sailed many a sea. I'm afraid the records of such are buried with those of James' and others of those bygone days. What have we to do with that past? The past built the present; the present moulds the future. Tonight, as in memory I see the white-edged waves break on a Strait shore, in fancy, in the moonlight and exquisite peace of the hour, in fancy I see another small craft, whereon one "was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow." It was only a small fishing craft, I suspect on which He and others "passed over unto the other side" and manned by those most familiar with the ways of the deep. And a storm lashed the sea and winds blew. And I fancy the terror... and despair of the small band. Until One was awakened... "And the wind ceased and there was a great calm" akin I would say to the peace which comes to close this week of work days, that have been to some a bit trying and burdensome with the various cares, and trials, and sorrows which beset life's road.
