The Woman's Realm

'DOROTHY'

"A Gift of God," thus means your name.
What lovelier could a woman claim?
How high the standard she must set,
For Dorothy must ne'er forget
She is God's gift to one and all,
And from her hands let healing fall.
And from her lips the gentle phrase.
A blessing, she, in all her ways.

Her family and friends know well
Her presence casts a magic spell.
She is so quick to proffer aid;
Her sympathy is ne'er mislaid.
Where'er she is the gloom grows bright—
A gift of God must bring the light.

A Dorothy may never rest
From giving to the world her best.
However small or wide her sphere,
She will find duties crowding near,
And these she'll do with loving heart.
Like Mary of the "Better Part"—
A gift of God, what lovelier name
Could woman claim?—Exch.

CHASER

A glass of cordial was always drunk after eating ice cream in the 1780's to "prevent any injurious effects from the frozen dessert."

HINTS ON ETIQUETTE

Impatience and temper shown when you have to wait for an elevator or other service in store, restaurant or other place of business, marks you in these times not only as bad mannered but as unpatriotic.

Afghanistan "broadtail" skin, most valuable of skins produced in that country because of its lustre and light weight, is taken from prematurely born or stillborn lambs.

SWEET SANDWICHES

Spread peanut butter, moistened with orange or pineapple juice between graham crackers or whole wheat bread.

Combine currant jelly, grated orange rind and chopped fresh mint.

Mix finely-rolled peanut brittle with butter or margarin."

Combine peanut butter with dates and honey or orange marmalade.

The King's sword of honor for Stalingrad has been finished and will be exhibited publicly before being sent to Russia.

EASING LAUNDRY STRESS

Many Canadian women are taking to the washtubs again to relieve the stress placed on laundries short of help and endeavouring to cope with the influx of war workers into many centres. As a short cut to efficient laundering, women who have no sorting tables should spread newspapers on the floor to avoid soiling clothes further. Removing stains and doing small mending jobs before laundering saves wear and tear on fabrics and soaking is eliminated if soap is rubbed on particularly soiled spots; ironing is also eliminated on such articles as sheets, pillow cases, terry towels, dish towels, underwear nightgowns and pyjamas.

Pressing Woollens

Woollens in the finished state are as capricious as the lambs which produced them. To keep woollen properly pressed and looking attractive the Prices Board's consumer branch suggests that if they are brushed before being pressed it will prevent dust from being steamed into the fabric. When it comes to pressing watch the heat of your iron and press with a damp cloth.

KING COLE TEA AND COFFEE

Helen went slowly upstairs to her room. Then she stood irresolutely for a minute in front of the huge old-fashioned press where she kept her clothes before she took from this a small tin safe and unlocked it. Her own jewels, which Alfredo, had given her, were in the safe, and she removed them from their velvet-lined boxes, one by one, and locked at them. Finally she lifted a last box, larger than any of the others, and opened that. Out of it she took the Borghese necklace.

She was still running it through her fingers when there was a gentle knock at the door. She said "Come in!" without laying the necklace aside.

"I gather you had a satisfactory conference," Ronnie remarked pleasantly, but a little dryly. "There must have been lots of details to settle though. I hope Dabney didn't wear you out, staying so late —good heavens, Helen, what have you got in your hands?"

"I was going to tell you, Ronnie It's your necklace."

"My necklace!"

"Yes. I bought it back from Mrs. Crowder quite a while ago. You know her husband lost a lot of money. I always meant to give it back to you sometime."

"But Helen, I couldn't let you do such a thing! That necklace is worth—"

"I know what it's worth. I paid for it. And of course you're going to let me give it back to you. That's what I bought it for, I tell you. Only you must promise me you won't sell it again. I don't suppose you'll ever feel you would need to, now that everything's straightening out so well for you. But even if you should feel that way, you mustn't do it. Because it's not just an heirloom any more, it's a present to show that I'm glad you're happy and that I'm happy too. A wedding present."

"A wedding present!"

"Yes. Dont ask any more questions tonight, Ronnie. Let me put the necklace on you. Tell Welby what I said about it. Good night, Ronnie dear."

Dorothy Dix Says—

WOMAN'S WILES MAY NOT FOOL MAN BUT HE WON'T ADMIT IT

Why Business Training Vanishes In Presence Of A Blond One Of Life's Mysteries

A correspondent asks: "Do men see through the arts and wiles that women use to catch them" Ah, who knows If we could answer that question, we would have solved one of the greatest mysteries in life for nothing else is so strange as that men who are hard-boiled, astute, shrewd judges of character apparently park these qualities when they come to dealing with women and are so gulleless that a girl baby can fool them.

A pertinent illustration of this is found in the fact that it is practically impossible to convict a young man and pretty woman of any crime, no matter how strong is the evidence against her. A blond with golden locks and a peaches-and-cream complexion can literally get away with murder. The twelve good men and true who view her charms from the jury box are convinced that no one with such a willowy figure and eyes that look like violets drenched in dew could be anything but angelic, and that if she did kill her husband, no doubt he deserved it.

MAN IGNORES TRAINING

And look at the ease with which divorcees remarry! marry. It often seems that two or three decrees absolute are an asset instead of a liability in acquiring a new husband. A man would be leery about going into a partnership with a man who had failed to make good in all of his previous business connections. He would wonder if the man was cantankerous and hard to get along with, or if he was lazy and trifling, or if he wasn't a square-shooter, but he doesn't make many inquiries concerning why the lady's previous mates lost their taste for her.

If she is a good-looker, he just takes her at her face value and lets it go at that

And look at the way men marry. Not silly adalescent boys in the throes of their first attack of calf love, but hard-headed, canny, old business men who have piled up their fortunes by turning a cold and suspicious eye upon every venture and to whom no man could sell a gold brick, though he spoke with the eloquence and persuasiveness of a spellbinder. Yet every day we hear of aged millionairs leading to the altar girls young enough to be their granddaughters in the firm belief that they are loved for themselves alone.

And there is the vast army of men who marry women they are not in love with and don't want to marry, whom they never intended to marry, and who spend the balance of their lives wondering why they did it. If these men were weaklings with no minds of their own, you could understand how they fell victims of the husband-hunters. Or, if they were dull and stupid, you could see how they happened to stumble into the traps that were laid for them. But they are not. They are strong men, clever men, men who know their way about, men who are wise to everything except the ways of women.

ARE MALES AS DUMB AS THEY SEEM

Or are they It seems so incredible that they don't see through the arts and wiles of the fair sex that it keeps women wondering if men really are as dumb as they seem. When a pretty little gold-digger rolls her eyes at a rich old man and asks him pretty, please, to give little Sweetums a diamond bracelet cause her itsy, bitsy heart is set on it and she wants it so-o-o- bad, does he really believe that she is the artless child that she is pretending to be, or an expert holdup artist?

When a man's wife dies, leaving him with a houseful of little children, and all the marriageable ladies of his acquaintance, who have found no takers, begin to pursue him with invitations to dinners and lunches, and to develop an abnormal affection for his poor darling little motherless ones, doesn't his Guardian Angel ever whisper to him that he had better watch his step, or else he will find himself in the Marriage License Bureau before he knows it?

When a man whose attentions have been without intention and who is tired of a girl and is trying to break away from her, lets her weep on his breast and tell him that it will break her heart to give him up, doesn't he know that she is using woman's oldest and most true and tried weapon to get her man, and that by the time he has wiped her tears away she will be planning the wedding?

Not being idiots or blind, men must see through all of women's transparent little ruses, and why they fall for them, goodness only knows. Maybe they get a kick out of playing with TNT. Maybe it flatters their vanity to be the object of feminine pursuit. Maybe it amuses them to see how cleverly women play the love game. Only men know, and they won't tell.

Q. I asked my dressmaker to make me a cape. She tells me this is against regulations. Is this correct?

A. Yes. Manufacturers are not allowed to make capes any more. These can be considered as luxury garments and the regulation is designed to conserve material for more essential garments.

Q. Is it against Board regulations for my grocer to put away groceries —for example raisins —for a farmer's wife who is a regular customer?

A. There is no regulation prohibiting a grocer from first meeting the needs of his established customers before taking care of others.

Q. Can I have a sugar ration for a horse?

A. Sorry, No.

Q. I have a three months old child. Now she can obtain sufficient corn syrup for her diet. What will happen as she grows older and required more formula?

A. Until she is two years old your daughter may have 84 ounces of corn syrup monthly an amount which under ordinary circumstances should meet her normal requirements.

"Ah," said the Chief Clerk. "I'm glad to notice that you are arriving punctually now."

"Yes, sir. I've bought a parrot."

"A parrot? What on earth for? I told you to get an alarm clock."

"Yes; I did. But after a day or two I got used to it and it didn't wake me. So I got a parrot. And now when I go to bed I fix the alarm clock and put the parrot cage on top of it. What that bird says when the alarm goes off would wake up anyone."

All That Glitters

By Frances Parkinson Keyes

"I might buy some colored clothes but I won't promise to put them on until I see how I feel in them".

"I'm very glad. Because Dabney wants to do some entertaining this year when Guy comes on. He told me to ask you if you'd act as hostess for him. You'd be doing a big service to the county, as well as to Dabney, if you'd help him out."

"Why, of course I'd be glad to help Dabney out. I'll tell him to count on me the next time I see him."

She knew she would not have long to wait, that Dabney would inevitably turn up at Hunter's Green within the next day or two, if he did not actually do so that afternoon. But as the day wore on, she decided to go to see him. For some unaccountable reason, she had a sudden impulse to ride, instead of driving her car.

Helen had not been on a horse since she had ridden with Alfredo in Mexico. Now, in her outmoded and outgrown habit, she felt a little strange and awkward at first.

The pony "ambled" along peacefully, giving her no trouble, and when she reached Sycamore Forest Dabney Turberville expressed no surprise at the sight of her. He ordered tea, and this was ceremoniously brought in, hot and fragrant, and flanked by biscuits dripping with jam and butter.

"Welby and I had a rather confidential talk this morning, Dabney. I've been thinking for some time that perhaps I wouldn't be needed at Hunter's Green much longer. Welby said I was needed, so I'm going to stay — through the winter anyway. Only not in the big house any longer. We're going to remodel the schoolhouse." She produced Welby's sketches and scribblings which she had brought with her in her pocket. "Do you think that's a good idea?"

"Excellent. As Welby pointed out, you can have company of your own quite independently, whenever you feel like it. I'll pass the good news on to Guy the next time I write. I'm sure he'll be delighted with the arrangement."

"Yes. We didn't have much chance to be alone last fall. Not that we needed much. I don't know whether Guy told you—he proposed to me the day after he got here."

"No, he didn't tell me."

"He said of course he knew it was too soon. But that the time before, when he came here on purpose to propose, he had been too late. So he decided not to make that same mistake again. He said almost anything might happen during a long, dull, dreary winter, that I might even get interested in you."

"Helen, you're incomparable. Since you've told me this much, would it be indiscreet to inquire how much encouragement you gave poor Grenville?"

"I didn't give him a great deal but I was careful not to discourage him either. I said I supposed that some day, when I felt better, it would be natural for me to think of getting married again, and that I had already made up my mind when I did, I would marry an only child. I knew I never could face seven brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law again. I said I would prefer to have my husband an orphan too, and of course, in that way you would be even better than Guy. But after all, I like Lady Grenville very much, so probably I should like Lord Grenville too And I certainly like Guy."

"Yes, I gathered that. But you're not in love with him, are you?"

"No. But I thought this time I might see how it would work out to like someone before I fell in love with him. I think when Guy gets here this year it would be just as well if I were more or less prepared to say something definite to him, don't you? And if I had a place to say it in?"

Dabney agreed gravely that it would, and from that point they went on to discuss her possible usefulness to him.

It was late when Helen and Dabney started to ride back together, and very much later when they finally reached Hunter's Green. Welby and Ronnie had gone upstairs, so for another hour the pleasant tete-a-tete which had begun at midafternoon continued. When at last he rose, he looked down at her quizzically. "What would you say to me," he inquired 'if I told you I'd feel the evening had a perfect ending if you'd let me kiss you good night?"

"I don't know. That's another thing I'd have to think over."

"You don't think it would jeopardize Guy's chances for the future?"

"No. I think if his chances could be jeopardized by a mere kiss, they couldn't amount to much anyway."

"Well, then—"

She raised her lips, and felt his face against hers and his arms folded around her. Then he was gone, and she was alone again.
