THE CLOCK TURNED BACK IN LUM AND ABNER FILM

For the first time Lum and Abner appear as young men and old men alternately on the screen in the Jack Wm. Votion Production, "Partners in Time," now at the Capitol Theatre.

Director William Nigh agreed that the stars, Chester Lauck and Norris Goff, could use their natural voices for those of the young Lum and Abner, and that their real life youthfulness was well adapted to the 1904 clothes and haircuts of the early sequences of the comedy.

However, during the filming, the stars would speak a line as the young men instead of the old men or vice versa, forgetting for the moment whether they were dressed as the youthful Lum and Abner or the old fellows. Movement and timing provide another problem for the speed of the young and the slow deliberate movements of the older men had to be watched carefully.

Lum and Abner appear in the beginning and the ending of the story in their usual characterization of "old boys", which is paced a bit slower than the major portion of the story, showing young Lum and Abner dancing and singing at an old-fashioned box social, riding the town's only fire engine, speeding down the main street at 15 miles an hour in a brand new Flanders automobile, and carrying on romances with Elizabeth Meadows and Spinster Abigail.

Moncton Minister To Head United Church Conference

SACKVILLE, N.B., June 12 — (CP) — Rev. J.H. Freestone of Wesley Memorial Church, Moncton, N.B., was elected president of the Maritime Conference of the United Church of Canada today. He succeeded Rev. L.B. Campbell, of First United Church, Sydney, N.S.

Four nominations had been made by Presbyteries as follows: Rev. J.A. MacKeigan, Mr. Freestone, Rev. W.S. Godfrey, and Rev. L.E.G. Davies. Dr. MacKeigan withdrew his name and the conference voted on the remaining three. On a second ballot, Mr. Freestone was declared elected. On the motions of Dr. Davies and Mr. Godfrey the election was made unanimous.

Before inducting the new president into his office the retiring president, Rev. L.B. Campbell gave an account of his year of office. He spoke of the Crusade for Christ and His Kingdom and the canvass for the pension fund. These had given an impetus to the work of the whole church. One of the most encouraging features was the increased part the laymen had taken in all the work. He thanked the conference for its kindness and courtesy through the years.

In a brief ceremony, Mr. Freestone was inducted as president. He is recognized as one of the leading preachers of the Maritime Conference and has taken a leading part in the work of the church. He was educated in arts and theology at Mount Allison University, and is a native of England.

Swimming, Life Saving Program Begins Today

The Red Cross Swimming and Life Saving Program for the 1946 Summer season will get underway today with the arrival of Dr. Harvey Doney of Toronto, National Director of First Aid and Swimming. Under the direction of Mrs. Harry Cudmore, who is in charge of this programme for the province, arrangements have been made for Dr. Doney to address groups of grown-ups, as well as children, in different centres throughout the province during his three day visit here.

The first meeting will be held this evening at the Summerside High School under the auspices of the Summerside Y's Mens Club, Kinsmen's Club and Home and School Welfare Group. Miss Hilda Gillis of the National Film Board, has very kindly consented to show films on Swimming and Water Safety at these meetings which will be held in Charlottetown, Souris, St. Peter's, Cardigan, Montague, Murray Harbour, Georgetown, Morell, Mount Stewart, North Rustico and Borden. It is hoped in this way to form active Committees which will sponsor the "Learn to Swim" programme in the community. In a province such as this, completely surrounded by water, everyone should know how to swim and understand something of water safety methods.

At the Charlottetown meeting, scheduled to take place in Prince of Wales College on Monday evening next, about 36 Charlottetown children who successfully passed the Red Cross Swimming Course last summer will receive their awards in the form of very attractive pins.

Dr. Doney will speak to the Rotary, Gyro and Kinsmens Club at their regular meetings on Monday next.

energy, housing and direction of Crown companies.

Today's final war cleanup honor's list touched the men who planned, trained and administered the services and men who were the backbone of the merchant navy.

A Short List

It was a relatively short list, compared with the 1,241 names in the New Year's honors in which the proportion of awards for service in the field was higher.

Of the honors announced today, the navy captured 48, the merchant navy 19, the army 227 and the air force 144. All the women's auxiliary services were included.

With the exception of Mr. Howe's name and the usual merchant navy list, no civilians were mentioned today but it is reliably learned that a lengthy special list will be issued July 1—Dominion Day—containing the names of Canadians honored for war service to the country in a civilian capacity.

To Issue Canada Medal?

It is understood there is a possibility that the Canada Medal—announced during wartime but never issued—may make its first appearance and that it may be distributed in several classes and take the place of the Order of the British Empire.

Highest honor—Companion of Honor (C.H.) of the Order of the Bath went to Gen. McNaughton, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., former 1st Army commander and at present chairman of the permanent Joint Defence Board and United Nations Atomic Commission member.

A soldier and three airmen received the Companion of the Order of the Bath (C.B.) They were:

Maj.-Gen. Hugh A. Young, C.B.E., D.S.O., of Ottawa and Winnipeg, recently retired Quartermaster General of the Army and largely responsible for the gigantic task or bringing home Canada's fighting men and their war brides and children.

Air Vice-Marshal W. A. Curtis, C.B.E., D.S.C., of Ottawa, No. 2 uniformed officer of the R.C.A.F. and one of its leading planners.

Air Vice-Marshal Kenneth McG. Guthrie, C.B.E., of Winnipeg, commander of the important No. 2 Training Command with headquarters in Winnipeg.

Air Vice-Marshal George V. Walsh, C.B.E., M.B.E., of Ottawa, retired member of the Canadian Joint Staff in Washington where he carried out an effective liaison with United States General Staff.

Highest Navy honor was Commander of the Order of the British Empire and one of the two winners was Capt. Roger E.S. Bidwell of Halifax and Kingston, Ont., director of the Navy's new Fleet Air Arm and first Canadian officer of this new service to be recognized.

But Seeks

the Paris four-power foreign ministers conference Saturday, he said:—

"I am not going to be a party, as long as I hold this office to any design or strategy or allotment of force to attack Russia. I will not be a party to it and I do not believe there is a single soul in the Cabinet who would allow one atom of thought to such a thing.

"Neither will we give one moment's consideration to expansion. But this division of Europe—this awful business of drawing a line from Stettin to Albania and behind that this solidified position — if this happens, which God forbid — you will have two camps in Europe, and that will be the road to another struggle.

"I say to Generalissimo Stalin and Mr. Molotov: 'We will not divide you.'

"Let the four-power commission go everywhere. Let us pool our knowledge...

"I was asked would I sign a separate peace treaty, contrary to the decisions arrived at during the war. I don't know what steps we may take to get these treaties. But I say no one nation is going to keep me forever in a state of war with other countries. While I do not commit myself to any method, the way will have to be found. We cannot go on in this way. It is indefensible.

"When the United States offered a 25-year-treaty to keep Germany disarmed, I thought it was a reasonable time to grapple with Nazism and I welcomed it. So did my colleagues in the Government. By God! Wouldn't I have liked such a treaty to have been in force at the time of Dunkerque!"

Defending his policy with regard to Spain, Mr. Bevin said he believed "the problem of Spain has been muddled," and that "if other countries had not interfered in the affairs of Spain, Franco would have gone."

He cautioned against invoking sanctions, because "if you start on that game you will get resentment from the Spanish people instead of support."

"I have said before that directly you start sanctions, you must prepare for war."

Mr. Bevin said he was in closest touch with Spaniards, and "they dread civil war—and so would you."

Fisheries Federation

displayed in erecting such a splendid Legion Home. The hall, His Honour said, was a credit to its sponsors and to the City of Charlottetown as well.

Commends Federation

Mr. J. H. Myrick, Tignish, said the Federation filled a great need in the Island's fishing industry. With its close ties with the Fishery Council of Canada, it was enabled to bring the needs of the fishing industry in the Province to the immediate attention of the Dominion Fisheries Department. The directors of the Federation, Mr. Myrick said, represent every phase of the industry. He thought the Federation had now grown to that point where the onerous duties of Mr. G. W. McLeod as secretary should be lightened by setting up a central office in Charlottetown with a stenographer to assist Mr. McLeod.

Col. A. L. Barrie, chief supervisor of fisheries, Eastern division, Halifax, warned the meeting not to let the Federation die because of a lethargic spirit. Hard times were not too far away and the Federation could be of inestimable value to the fishing industry during such a period. Of the four primary sources of wealth, than which no province or country could have more, Prince Edward Island, Col. Barrie said, had only two: fishing and farming.

Emphasis on Quality

If the fishing industry in the Province was to continue profitable, the fishermen and the canners must be made to realize that in the face of a steadily-increasing competition from other countries, the quality of Island sea foods must be maintained and increased wherever possible. There was a time when less careful Government inspection methods made all sorts of subterfuges by irresponsible persons easy to practice. Only a few years ago, he said, oysters were sold in Montreal and other large centres bearing the name "Malpeque"—oysters which Col. Barrie was certain had never been near that world-famous oyster-area.

Today, however, Government regulations had become stricter and more difficult to circumvent and all the fishing industry had now to worry about was to produce the quality, and the Government would see that the credit for that quality went where it belonged.

Various regulations could be made for the benefit of the fishing industry here by Orders-in-Council, Col. Barrie said, but he wished all members to understand that any changes in the Fisheries Inspection Act could only be made by Parliament.

Mr. C. P. McCarthy, president of the P. E. Island Fishermens Union, with headquarters at Tignish, commended the work done for the Federation by the secretary, Mr. G. W. McLeod, and by the vice-president, Mr. J. H. Myrick. Mr. McCarthy said he considered the Federation had got off to a good start and that it had already succeeded in bringing many benefits to the industry which had hitherto not been enjoyed. He would like to see a member of the co-operative fishery association present and suggested that Mr. M. A. Farmer might be on the directorate.

First In Canada

Mr. Clive Planta said the meet- of the Federation at Charlottetown was of more than ordinary interest. It was the first provincial fisheries federation to be organized in Canada and it was fitting that Charlottetown was its birthplace, for Charlottetown had also been the birthplace of Confederation. Another feature of the meeting was unique inasmuch as the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province was present. Mr. Planta said he could not recall any other fisheries meeting ever held in Canada at which a Lieut.-Governor had been an honoured guest.

There were signs on the economic horizon which would indicate a need for greater caution, especially in the lobster industry. On Dec. 31 next all fish sold to UNNRA must be loaded and on the water, Mr. Planta said. In the meantime, Iceland, Norway and other countries are getting back into the fishing industry with their old-time efficiency, and the Island fisherman must expect increasing competition, so that quality should be maintained and increased to meet the coming economic threat.

Mr. Planta said he could not promise that canners would be allowed to use the quarter-pound cans which they had left over from last year. He understood some canners had been given such permission but he could not, speaking officially, give a definite "yes" or "no".

Compares Average Catch

Comparing the average yearly catch of fish in Canada between the years 1935 to 1939, with that between the years 1940 to 1945, Mr. Planta said the average during the depression years was 1,600,000 pounds of which 25,000 pounds had been exported. The remainder had been kept in Canada for domestic use. The average for the war years was, Mr. Planta said, 3,900,000 pounds. However, last year's catch was 7,700,000 pounds of which over 5,000,000 pounds had been exported. Those figures indicated, Mr. Planta said, that the fishing industry would have to make greater efforts than in the past to maintain such an exporting record during the years ahead.

Dr. Ernest Hess, director of the fisheries laboratory at Halifax, emphasized the need of quality in Island fish products. The new laboratory in Charlottetown would be a source of much assistance to all packers and canners of fish in the Province, Dr. Hess said. Many canners were of the opinion they had nothing to learn about the packing and curing of fish, but he could assure them they could not possibly have such a wide and diversified experience as those laboratory men who were inspecting the products of canners all over the country. The quality of Island products compared favourably, Dr. Hess said, with those of other Provinces.

Mr. J. F. Connolly, provincial deputy-Minister of Reconstruction, gave some figures in which he showed that the average yearly earnings of those counties in the Maritimes whose main industry was that of fishing was much lower than that of other counties. His Department, Mr. Connolly said, was at all times willing to give whatever assistance it could to the further development of the Island fisheries.

Mr. H. W. Tidmarsh said 78 per cent of the enquiries coming to the Tourist Bureau were about fishing possibilities in the Province. He was glad to see Mr. Connolly at the meeting for in the past he thought the Provincial Government had not paid enough attention to the Island's fisheries.

Mr. R. S. Homans, in charge of the new laboratory on Pickard's wharf, said he invited visits from canners and others interested in the fishing industry and would be glad to explain to them the methods used in examining the sea foods sent to the laboratory for grading or for other purposes.

Mr. J. J. Larabee, Dominion supervisor of fisheries, said the recent lifting of the price ceiling on canned lobsters, shad, clams and other sea foods, would mean an additional $500,000 in the pockets of the Island fishermen this year.

In Memoriam

MRS. BARNABY CROKEN

The death occurred on Saturday June 1st., at her home in Summerfield of Mrs. Barnaby Croken, at the age of sixty-nine years.

The late Mrs. Croken was before her marriage, Mary Eliza Gorman of Kensington. She had always enjoyed good health until a few months before her death when she was stricken with an illness for which no remedy could be found. All that medical skill, could do, tender nursing and the attentions of a devoted family were of no avail and her gentle spirit was called to its Eternal reward on the above mentioned date, fortified by the last rites of the Holy Catholic Church of which she was a faithful member. She was attended and consoled during her illness by her pastor Rev. Eugene Murray and frequent visits of her son, Rev. Harold Croken, pastor of Cardigan parish, who was with her when she passed away.

Her daughter Miss Eileen Croken R.N. was her mother's devoted nurse. Mrs. Croken's entire life was a preparation for death and her complete resignation to the Divine Will of God when she knew there was no hope of her recovery was most edifying. Mrs. Croken will ever be remember by a host of friends for her pleasant smile and gracious manner in her hospitable home. Endowed with the many virtues of a true Christian wife and mother her devotion to her family will be among their most cherished memories of her.

Besides her sorrowing husband she leaves to mourn three sons and two daughters, Rev. J. Harold Croken, parish priest of Cardigan; George at home and Joseph L. at Summerfield; Eileen at home and Mrs. Ambrose Curley of Summerfield.

Her funeral was held on June 4th to St. James Church, Summerfield. A Solemn High Mass of Requiem was sung by her son Rev. Harold Croken with Rev. Eugene Murray as Deacon and Rev. Basil Croken as sub-deacon. Rev. Phalen McKenna was Master of Ceremonies.

The following priests were present in the Sanctuary. Right Rev. Mgr. J. A. Murphy, Rev. Daniel Croken a brother-in-law of the deceased, Reverends W. A. Keefe, M. J. Rooney, R. J. Ellsworth, L. Ayers, M. J. Francis W. McGuigan B. McDonald, E. Robin, E. Dalton P. McMahon, J. Kelly, R. F. McDonald, G. McCabe, F.A. Butler. The service at the grave was conducted by her pastor Rev. Eugene Murray and a much loved wife and mother was laid to rest, there to await the glorious Ressurrection.

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

a sigh, I returned Jamie's parting wave and came then to the duties that were mine for today.

If I lunched alone it was from choice so that I might come more quickly to our most engrossing work of the moment—the set cutting. Jeanie had other detaining cares today and I imagined because of the complete stillness in her castle, that perhaps she found time for a much needed rest. The wee house had a deserted air, when I came there presently. Not a body was about, when I entered the porch and gently lifted and then shut the cellar hatch after me and commenced the day's cutting. Alone or with company, I find it a pleasant work, for while hands are busy, there is no time for the mind to wander. Away on wings from the heap of potatoes; from the basket at my knee and from the seed already cut which James is pleased to keep at a certain depth. "Now no deeper than this, Ellen," he will point out after the first baskets are emptied. And so, present surroundings forgotten, I go back through the years to see other seed-times. As a small girl, I remember those who were only a generation or so removed from the pioneers, at the work. Carefully, so as not to waste a precious eye—making a ceremony of it. farm-women in homespun skirts and, funny thing that it is, a 'kerchief tied beneath a chin, much like the present vogue but not so revealing. On a verandah or in a Summer kitchen cutting the "blues" or a few pinkish-white ones for early use. The conversation would be different then, full of folk lore and old legends and often interspiced with those, ghostly creatures walked to make a chill felt even in the sunshine of the day. And the Strait at farm's end would be blue and sparkling and far out on the horizon a vessel would sail, white sails spread, to some port that was only a word in the geography at school. In more adult years, Spring holidays were certain to bring the set-cutting and later at Alderlea two lads of fellows tried to help their mother and James would be in a state of concern over the outcome. "Those'll never grow, Ellen." However, they "grew and multiplied" by Fall. I was so taken up with my memories this afternoon, it was really no time until the bustle of the supper preparations had commenced and the team from the fields had come to the yard. I had supper at the wee house for Jeanie had opened her very last bottle of cherry jam as she said by way of celebrating something, which was only a vague statement at the time.

This evening is so beautiful, I shall be loath to have it slip away. When I came before the lamp-lighting from the house across the lane, the moon was barely above the mill and the fragrance of opened blossoms scented the lawns. The dark spots over on a hillside were the cattle that had come back to it only today and were now lying there at rest. Passing car lights vied with the moon but only briefly lighting the pond water before leaving us to our usual quiet and peace. The fall at the waste-gate was a sleepy murmur, and I heard the nesting robin in the old silver birch utter a throaty chirp, which promised a wealth of affection for the contents of the small eggs kept so warm beneath her wings. Night came calm and bright and so pleasant I should like to have gone adventuring. "But, Ellen," James exclaimed, "this is no time to be leaving the place. It's a long time since the blessing of this has come to Alderlea and would you have us away at the time?"

A few moments ago a car drew up at the door of the house across the lane. It came through the lovely moon-lit night, wherein one could wish that all trouble or pain should cease. Yet very often the night seems to increase one's sufferings and the hours are long. The car came in response to a 'phone call, to ease our suspense. And a professional voice inquired "Now, how do I get there?" in his busy round never having noticed that Mecca of mine—and Jeanie's, our lane's beginning—or end. And so the secret I had wihspered to Rissa the day of her visit is one no longer. Tonight the Doctor has come to the wee house across the lane. Meanwhile, as lights move about the rooms there, James pushed the lunch I had prepared with care, aside almost untouched. His feelings are obviously in a mixed and extremely concerned state, while I...queer one that I am ... find ... my pen unsteady and my vision blurred.

Until tomorrow... Diary. Good-night.....
