First Italian General

Modica, 15 miles northwest of Ispica gave up as the Canadians were preparing to strike it and the Canucks captured their first Italian General—Gen. Achille De Avet, commander of the 20th coastal division which was supposed to defend the coast where the Canadians landed.

With the Canadian attack imminent, the General asked for terms and was told "unconditional surrender." He accepted and Maj. Dick Malone of Winnipeg went into Modica to arrange the capitulation. They came away with the General and his staff and took them to the Canadian General.

I was at headquarters when the Italian General and his party arrived. Wearing shorts and bush shirt, the Canadian General received them in his headquarters under the trees. The Italian told him a few things about his defeat and division and asked if he could retain his revolver as a gesture of military honor. Permission was granted—but the General's ammunition was taken away from him.

The Italian General had been decorated with the Military Cross in the First Great War, by the Duke of Connaught. War-time Governor-General of Canada and his interpreter went to some lengths to inform the Canadian General of this.

Reached Front In Jeep

After 2 1/2 practically sleepless days trying unsuccessfully to keep up with the infantry on foot, I got hold of a jeep yesterday and sailed to the front in the wake of the victorious Canadians.

Along the road to Ispica, we saw smashed, horse-drawn Italian guns and ammunition wagons. Pillboxes and road blocks were visible after being shattered by our guns.

But for the presence of a few sentries in the woods and on the hills, the countryside looked peaceful.

The Canadians were everywhere. Columns were marching forward and convoys of trucks and guns were following through the fog of chalk dust.

We are all covered by this white dust—the Canadians look like real desert rats of the 8th Army, to which they now belong.

We don't know which is the worst, heat, flies, dust or mosquitoes—the latter being the best dive-bombers we have seen around these parts.

We passed Canucks riding up to the line in commandeered mule carts or using captured Italian trucks, bicycles or staff cars. They have in a field day on the provision before all their transport reaches them.

Canadian tanks have been rumbling forward and are going in support of the infantry.

We arrived at Ispica which has a normal population of 13,000, and found only a few women, children and dogs on the streets.

The town had been knocked about by naval gunfire and rubble littered the narrow streets and one wide avenue. There were painted signs on the walls reading ironically "Viva Il Duce" and "Duce a Noi."

Like most of these Sicilian towns, Ispica is a pile of crowded, stone houses with tile roofs, about as interesting as a blank sheet of paper.

Toward Modica

We left the town and headed northwest toward Modica. Along the way, troops were sitting by the roads, munching melons, grapes and tomatoes which are to Sicily what eggs and cranberries were in Tunisia.

Pitched high on a cliff, commanding the whole plain sweeping down to our landing beach, Ispica looked like a natural defensive point and we were puzzled why the Italians gave it up so easily.

Naval shelling had a lot to do with it, of course, and, besides, there were hundreds of determined Canadians waiting to storm the place before it hoisted the white flag.

The reaction of the Italian civilians has been rather surprising.

Sport Shorts From Britain

WITH THE R. C. A. F. SOMEWHERE IN ENGLAND July 15 (CP)—Beneath a setting of towering bombers, a softball game reunited professional hockey's great Kraut line.

The game was staged on a Canadian Bomber Group playing field where Bobby Bauer, a recent arrival overseas, saw his erstwhile Boston Bruins mates, Rocky Dumart and Milt Schmidt, for the first time since they left him in Canada many months ago.

Bobby joined forces with Milt on a makeshift team that walloped Rocky's outfit from another air station 30-10. Then the trio got together in the mess and chattered about hockey and things back home.

Schmidt and Dumart had met a few times previously in Britain. Attached to different squadrons, they opposed each other in a couple of Royal Canadian Air Force hockey games and when the season ended managed to get leave together in London. Both are corporals in the physical training branch.

A few days prior to the re-union, right winger Bobby held down right field for an R.C.A.F. personnel recreation centre team that slugged out a 15 victory over a Canadian Fire Fighters detachment. That was shortly after Bobby arrived as a radio mechanic.

Can't keep the women out of anything these days. However, not even the colorful variety of sweaters and slacks worn by a girls softball team was enough to distract them as they roared to a 14-11 triumph in a match at Canadian Bomber Group Headquarters.

It was a wild affair, this battle of the sexes, and the boys in the stands gave up trying to find the finer points of the match. The girls, members of the R.C.A.F. Women's Division, wore out four men hurriers.

LAW, Billy Lindsay of Ridgeway, Ont., pitched for the losers.

The lassies' lineup included LA W, Fred Perkins of Vancouver, Nora Plaxton of Victoria, Zeke Prouse of Little Britain, Ont., and Opls. Mary Hamilton of Watrous, Sask., and Mary Burbeck of Unity, Sask.

Despite duties as disciplinarian at an R.A.F. station housing Canadians leaving the 20th coastal division of Toronto manages to keep in close touch with his favorite sport—rowing.

Canadian singles sculling champion in 1935 and former football lineman with Toronto Argonauts, Mark cycles into Stratford-on-Avon three times a week to put grammar school tests on their faces in racing shells on the picturesque Avon River. He also does a fair amount of rowing himself.

"I was a headhunter when they show all kinds of promise," Mark said. Thousands knew Mark as the drum major who headed the R.C.A.F. band at Trenton, Ont., and other schemes and figured in many large parades before being posted overseas. He still makes an occasional appearance with the overseas band.

We expected they might be sulen and completely unco-operative but it has not been like that. Perhaps they are taking, but when the Canadians pass through towns, dozens of citizens stand on the sidewalks and give the "V-for-Victors" sign with their hands and grin as if it were an Italian celebration.

In Modica, I saw a dead Canadian lying by the roadside. Italians had draped the body with a white sheet and placed flowers on it.

Huge Bag of Prisoners

Yesterday we passed a batch of more than 1,000 prisoners—the largest I had seen. They were wearing khaki or green uniforms and looked completely unbothered, guarded by a dozen Canucks.

They crowded around and posed, as pleased as punch when an army film unit took pictures. This huge bag was captured by the Canadians at a six-day skirmish.

Modica is a small town of 50 homes and a church. In the centre is an unimposing square with the interesting tower of Palazzo Ciano.

Here I met some paratroopers who came down in that area and established the first link with the Canadians.

Up at the front here, it's better agricultural land than on the stony peninsula. The towns are cleaner and there are no macadam roads where we can get away from the horrible dust.

The allies continue to have air superiority over our operational zone but we do see some enemy planes. They attacked our shipping off the coast Sunday night and yesterday a dozen German fighters were a brilliant display of fireworks as our ack ack let go. One plane came down in flames.

There has been some strafing of the roads and it has been doing the old Tunisian job of spotting from our jeep as we zip along the roads.

Saw Montgomery

I saw Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery, commander of the British forces, for a fleeting moment Sunday on the road near the bleak town of Pachino. He was riding around in one of the big trucks used so successfully to bring in men and stores after the assault landing. Monty was wearing his black beret and looking very dusty and grim.

Pte. Pete Dunsay of London, Ont., said that when he landed on the beach with a truck on Sunday, Monty was sitting in a jeep with other senior officers.

Dunsay said the British Commander called the Canadians into a group, saying "rather good, boys, and I will give you some news."

Then he told them of the fall of Syracuse and added that he was very glad having the Canadians with him in this task. After the Canadians established their bridgehead, he told some Canadian officers that he was quite satisfied that the Canadians were as good as anything in the 8th Army.

"The best demonstrations of fire equipment and largest attendance meeting I have seen yet" were the words used by Fire Chief A. MacEachern and F. R. McLaine, in describing the 25th Maritime Fire Chiefs' convention at St. John, held July 13-14 inclusive.

Over 200 Maritime Fire Chiefs were present at the Convention which featured speakers from Boston and Quebec. Monday was a day devoted to demonstrations of fire equipment, life saving apparatus, and fire prevention.

Mr. and Mrs. A. MacEachern and Mr. and Mrs. F. R. McLaine, who returned by car last night, were representing Prince Edward Island at the convention.

Describing the Monday night demonstration, Mr. MacEachern told of a large parade of the St. John Fire Dept., East St. John Fire Dept., and the Auxiliary Fire Dept. After the parade a demonstration was given before the Admiral Beatty Hotel where the use of aerial ladders, and flood lights, held the gaze of many spectators.

At Lake Lillie, a pumping demonstration was given in which 25 streams of water were kept in the air at one time. The use of an aerial ladder with attached water tower to which water was pumped up for use on high buildings, was shown.

At the meeting on Tuesday Percy Buckley, Boston, director of the International Association of Fire Prevention lectured on "Fire Waste Control in Wartime." W. L. Clermont, Dominion Fire Commissioner dealt with "National Building Code."

On Wednesday, Col. E. J. Mooney, Halifax lectured on "Fire prevention and inspection in co-operation with building inspector." Fire prevention in public halls, theatres, churches, etc. was the subject used by Col. Wright, Fire Marshal of Nova Scotia.

Those in attendance from Prince Edward Island said that perfect harmony and inspection in co-operation and an enjoyable time was had during their visit.

THIRD DAY OF CHEMICAL COURSE — The agenda for yesterday the third day of the Chemical Warfare Course at St. Dunstan's University, arranged by the Charlottetown Air Raid Precautions, featured a lecture by Dr. E. C. Keen on Gas Knowledge, blister gases, blister gas sprays, and detection of gas. Also in the morning a lecture was given by Prof. G. L. Bennett on anti-gas organization, gas detection service, and decontamination service. In the afternoon Dr. J. A. MacMillan lectured on first aid treatment of gas casualties. At 4:30 about 20 girls of the Red Cross Corps, Charlottetown A.R.P. gave a first aid demonstration before some 50 spectators. Supposed casualties were fitted with splints and bandages and rushed by ambulance to hospital. Another demonstration at 6:45 P.M. by the Auxiliary Fire Service proved the efficiency of this unit. Water was pumped from a spring, about 1-3 mile from the college to a large barrel from where, by a second pump, it was forced through hose trained on the science building. All of which showed that any source of water can be converted into a high pressure stream by this service. Discussions of the workings of this equipment accompanied the demonstration. The chemical course ends this afternoon.
