Mrs. Wilson's Experience a Guide to Women Passing through the Change of Life

Hamilton, Ontario.—"I have taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I cannot speak too highly of it as I was at the Change of Life and was all run-down and had no appetite. I was very weak and sick, and the pains in my back were so bad I could hardly move. I got very sad at times and thought I had not a friend on earth. I did not care if I lived or died. I was very nervous, too, and did not go out very much. A friend advised me to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I did. I am a farmer's wife, and always worked hard until lately, and was in bed for two months. I began to feel like a new woman after the first bottle and I recommend it with great success. Also Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about your medicines, as I cannot speak too highly of them."—Mrs. E. M. WILSON, 471 Wilson Street, Hamilton, Ontario.

"Jealous Hearts"

By MILDRED BARBOUR

CONCERNING THE ACTION AND CHARACTERS:—

The happiness of—MILlicent DEERING, a bride of two months, is shattered when she finds her cousin and foster-sister, ELINOR, and her husband, TONY, kissing in the garden the night before Elinor's departure from their southern home for New York. She asks herself why he married her, if he loved Elinor.

The situation is this:—DAN CARVER, deceased, who adopted Millicent and Elinor when they were children, had been in love with Tony's mother in his youth. Becoming eccentric as he aged, he was obsessed with a desire to have one of the girls married to Tony. In his will he had stipulated that the bulk of his estate is to go to the one who becomes Tony's wife. The other is to receive a small allowance for life. And it is Millicent who is in love with Tony. But Tony loves Elinor and is glad of an excuse to propose to her, having done so twice before. She rejects him and tells him he must marry Millicent.

For an instant there was some think in Elinor's eyes that recalled to Tony the picture of Saint Joan seeing visions.

WOMAN DISPOSES

Tony listened incredulously to Elinor's cool, mocking words: "You've got to marry Millicent." "Then he said stiffly: "I don't have to marry any one. I asked you to be my wife—I have loved you ever since we were children. You know that." "But Uncle Dan's will—" "That had nothing to do with it. I already had proposed to you twice and had been refused—before your uncle even thought of dying. Her slim hand ruffled the grass beneath the oak, and she smiled demurely at her own thoughts. "This proposal today—" "This proposal today came from my heart—like the others," he declared hotly. "I'll admit that I believed I had a ghost of a chance after my father told me the conditions of the will." She lifted her eyes to his, her delicate dark brows raised in amusement. "You thought I was mercenary enough to marry you, rather than face poverty?" He flushed helplessly. "Not mercenary, Elinor. But—but what could life mean to you without luxury?" "Everything!" she told him coolly.

When your Child has Croup

RUBBED ON throat and chest, the effect of Vicks in relieving spasmodic croup is two fold: (1) Its medicated vapors, released by body heat, reach air passages direct; (2) At the same time it stimulates the skin, thus helping the inhaled vapors ease the difficult breathing.

cle Dan was as clever as they come. He knew what he was doing—and how it would work out. Maybe he took a sardonic pleasure in being the deus ex machina; maybe he found it amusing to have one last whack at us from the grave—he was like that—but he knew. "Kiss what?" asked Tony sulkily. "That I loved you? And that I hadn't a chance? And that maybe you'd take me for the sake a sweetheart?" asked Tony politely as he lit a cigarette. Reluctantly, Elinor came back from visions of herself in the center of a stage, her arms filled with flowers, bowing to an audience that was mad with rapture and enthusiasm.

"Oh, Tony, you're such a dear, but sometimes so deliberately stupid!" she sighed. "Don't you see? You've got to marry Millicent, so she can get Uncle Dan's estate and be looked after and cared for all her life. I can get along on the pittance—in fact, I'll not need it for long. I'll be making millions on my own," she declared confidently, with her little mocking smile. "But poor Millicent would simply curl up and die, if she were left to look out for herself. She was meant for the wife-and-mother role. I was meant for the whole world."

He stared at her, as if trying to gauge her mood. Was she serious? Reluctantly, slowly, he realized that she was in earnest. "I'd be no earthly good as a wife, Tony," she went on. "I'd run away from home the first time a hand-organ played. And I wouldn't love you. I want the love and admiration of many men."

He sprang to his feet. "You don't know what you're saying!" he declared violently. "Don't!" She smiled at him provocatively, the mocking light dancing in her eyes. She was talking purely for effect—and she liked the way he reacted to her words. "Anyway, I know I wouldn't want you for a husband, Tony," she told him coolly. He stared down at her furiously for a moment, then he swung on his heel and left her. She watched him striding across the lawn, slim, strong, graceful, handsome and she smiled to herself. "He was amusing—for a beginning. But there are going to be dozens more, Elinor. I hope the fool is angry and piqued enough to go to Millicent. She'll take him like a shot." But would she? Would Millicent suspect that she was second choice—and reject him? (To Be Continued.)

It is really a Band!

This is what John Phillip Sousa—famous band leader said when he heard his band for the first time, on the new Orthophonic Victrola.

The audience is clamouring for an encore. "By Request!" The "March King" raises both his arms. A moment of silence—and the trumpets and trombones break into the martial swing of some world-known Sousa march. Magnificent playing—this! A crescendo of applause sweeps the auditorium, rivaling in volume the band itself. Tonight... tomorrow... whenever and as often as you wish, you may hear this band in your own living room, through the new Orthophonic Victrola. Not "something like Sousa", but Sousa, exactly as you would hear him in concert. Not Sousa only, but the foremost artists in every field, symphonic, operatic, ballad and dance, are ready to sing to you year after year with such realism, for this amazing instrument is based upon principle of natural music for the home. New beauty and depth—full, round, mellow, life-like. Bass and treble—all there! Beautiful cabinets, smart designs, rare woods. Electric drive, if you wish at slight additional cost. All instruments self-stopping. Prices payments at all His Master's Voice dealers. Hear them today!
