THE WOMAN HE MARRIED

BY JANE PHELPS

RIGHT ABOUT FACE

Chapter 73

For hours Dick and I talked. I made full confession of all I had done, all I owed. When added to the amount Dick owed the $1,000 he owed Burns, and some small amounts gambling debts the total was astounding to us.

"We never can pay it, never!" Dick moaned, his head in his hands. "Oh, why did you interfere with me last night, Nan? You'd be better off without me."

"You would always have been better off without me, Dick," I replied. "I urged you to speculate because of my wicked desire for clothes. It is clothes that have ruined us, Dick, just clothes—things that wear out, or go out of style almost as soon as they are purchased! I am so ashamed. I think I was as insane as you were when you tried to take you life. Why Dick, it seems as if I would never care for anything in the world again if only I can have you and Junior. I hate them as much as I loved them! They almost lost me you!" I burst into a wild fit of weeping. I had borne up as long as was possible.

Dick comforted me, holding me in his arms, taking equal blame with me for everything that had happened.

"I shall stay home today." It was Saturday. "You telephone I am not well. God knows it is the truth! And we will find out exactly where we stand and what we can do."

I did as he requested. They were very nice about it at his office and said for him to stay a home by all means if he was not well.

About 11 o'clock the telephone rang. I answerd.

"Someone wants to talk to you, Dick."

I knew from the conversation that it was Mr. Burns. Dick, if possible grew whiter than he already was.

"It is impossible, Burns, I shall have to have time . . . . I can't do it! You must know I am more anxious than you can be." He listened. Then with a puzzled look on his face said: "No, my wife cannot pay it. She has no money. I'll see you Monday."

"I wonder what he meant? Suppose he thought you had money."

I knew what he meant, and was sorely tempted to tell Dick the whole degrading story. Then better, more unselfish thoughts came to me. There could be nothing gained. It would only make it still harder for Dick. I was fairly sure Burns would say nothing of his failure to save me from my husband. He had offered to lend Dick that money to get even.

We spent the entire day going over our accounts, and planning what to do. I kept nothing from Dick, not one single thing. We had come to a point where a perfect understanding was absolutely broke my heart to add to his anxiety Enid lost all desire, all ability had lost all desire, all ability to to deceive him.

"I almost lost him," rang through my mind, "I almost lost him!"

As I have said before in telling my sordid, pitiful story (this part of it), you may think it strange tha I could do as I did if I loved my husband. What I did, was entirely apart from my love for him. I never, until that horrible awakening, thought of my extravagance as affecting in any way our relations as man and woman. That was a thing apart. He was my man, the only one I ever had, ever could love. I was his woman, his choice of all the girls he had known.

Now I realized how I had tried that love of his, how I had almost if not quite ruined our lives. Now I must make omends; must win back his trust. He still cared for me and it made me very humble as he told me that he loved me. I recalled how, at first and for many months, Dick had absolutely refused to let me run in debt, refused to let me run in debt, refused to speculate. Then I also recalled that he had said the gambling instinct had always been in him, that it had been hard to gamble in moderation so he had never gambled at all. I had urged him on, laughed at his fears. What a bad, bad wife I had been in every way! But when my tears dried and I attempted to tell him so, he put his hand over my mouth and would not listen.

"We will try and pull out together, Nan. Little Nan!" He had not called me that for many, many months, and my tears flowed again at the tender inflection and the old loving expression.

"We will pull together!" I returned when I could speak. "It will not be trying, but accomplishing."

"A born optimist." He tried to smile at me. But it was a faiure. Neither of us felt like smiling. We owed over $3800 exclusive of what was due on the lot. That we would sell at once.

"I have only made two payments. If we can get that back it will pay Mrs. Gray. She must be paid first of all. They can ill spare that amount. And they are old, Gray doesn't earn much."

Grandma Never Let Her Hair Get Gray

SHE KEPT HER LOCKS DARK AND GLOSSY, WITH SAGE TEA AND SULPHUR

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. At little cost you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and look years younger.

PARLIAMENT BUILDING NEARING COMPLETION.

OTTAWA, Jan. 31. The new parliament buildings are for all practical purposes completed, with the exception of the entrance hall and a operation of the court of honor and the tower, Hon F. B. McCurdy, Minister of public works, stated this evening. Construction of the tower, which was stopped when cold weather set in, will be resumed in the spring. It contains no offices, and while it has been built up to the height of the first storey. Its present statt will not in any way interfere with the use of the building.

BOYCOTT A FAILURE

CALCUTTA, Jan. 31—The boycott requested last week by the Bengal provincal congress against functions held in honor of the visit of the Duke of Connaught, who is in India to inaugurate reform legislation, has been largely a failure although a general strike became partially effective today at noon on the arrival of the Duke along the route from the station to Government House, where he was received by the ruling princes.

War Veterans Column

ADDRESS CORRESPONDENCE TO WAR VETERANS COLUMN, P.O. BOX 365, CHARLOTTETOWN

BEYOND DOUBT.—A soldier in the Dublin Fusiliers went to the orderly-room and asked for a few days leave. He was asked why he wanted leave. "Well, sorr it's like this, sorr, I've had a letter from me woife. She says she's spring-cleaning, and wants to know if I can give her some help. The sergeant said:—"That's a funny thing, Mike, only last week I had a letter from your wife, and she said by no means give you leave, for you were more trouble in the house than out of it." Michael looked rather staggered and said:—"Then I suppose I cannot have me lave?" "No." Michael was just marching out of the door when he turned round: "Might I spake to ye agin, sorr?" The sergeant inclined his head. "Well, sorr, there's two liars in this room and I'm one of them, for I'm not married."

MERCANTILE MARINE.—The Veterans Association have received a letter from the Honorary Secretary of the Charlottetown Branch of the Navy League, stating that the League will be very glad to co-operate with the Association in giving our Island boys every opportunity to follow the sea, and asking the Association to bring before returned men the facilities offered by the school of navigation established here. If returned men interested will write us for information in the matter, we will be very pleased to try and secure the required information. We would like to see every Canadian already qualified for positions at sea, get a berth on a ship flying the British flag. If we can help any Overseas man to get such a berth we will be glad to do so.

MOVING PICTURES.—Since our remarks in last week's issue on this subject, we notice that the question is becoming a live issue in Canada! We have no objection to a certain number of American or any other foreign pictures being shown in our theatres, as they serve as an education for us, but we do object to have the Stars and Stripes continually before our eyes. The local management are we understand not to be blamed for this state of affairs. Lord Beaverbrook states in his journal editorially, "Canada is bowling for British films which it cannot get," partly because British producers include Canada in sale of films to the United States. He states also "that sufficient British films are produced to enable them to be released in Canada at the rate of two each week. When Canada reads that its film rights are sold to America, the storm in loyalist Toronto will reach Vancouver." The National President of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire in speaking to the Ontario provincial chapter the other day said.—"Don't you believe it, when you are told that British films are not as good as Americans films and that we can not get continuous British films in Canada." She added "The United States is using the cinema as a means of Americanizing our citizens." Whether or not this last opinion is correct, we are of the opinion that the time has come for Canadians to demand, that we see less of the Stars and Stripes and American uniforms in our picture houses, and a great deal more of our own grand old flag—the Union Jack.

PRECAUTIONS.—Medical Officer: "Now, Sergeant, I am very concerned as to the quality of the drinking water. What precautions do you take against infection?" Sergeant: "Well, sir, first we boil it." M. O.: "Good." Sergeant: "Then we filter it. M. O: "Excellent." Sergeant: "And then we drink beer"

ONE HUNDRED DEAD SOLDIERS.—In the Edmonton Journal of 15th January, 1921, there appears a very interesting account of how one hundred French soldiers met an untimely death during the Great War. The incident was seen only by an American Airman who had been one of the first to join the Lafayette Escadrille, and the incident happened during the Verdun battles on 12th June, 1916. The Airman was so impressed with the sudden and terrible ending of these men that he drew a cheque for 530,000 francs on his French bankers and sent it to his headquarters to be forwarded to the proper authorities to have a suitable monument erected to their memory. The airman's name was Gordon L. Rand the son of a wealthy New York banker. The hundred soldiers was the remnant of a French Company of Infantry, and had lined up in their trench waiting for the word from their N. C. O. (who stood with watch in hand) to go over the top, when suddenly the treacherous rain-soaked earth of the sides of the trench rolled together completely engulfing and burying alive the entire command. With the article there appears a recent photograph of the site of the trench, showing a line of muzzles of the rifles with bayonets fixed pointing towards heaven, as also a photograph of the monument which has been erected over the site. During the stress of war the incident had simply been reported by the officer in charge of the sector as "a hundred men missing in action." Nothing would ever have brought the matter to the notice of the world except for the lone airman, who happened to be flying low over the position having noticed and reported it. The airman later lost his life in action.

BURNS CONCERT.—We feel we must state that the Veterans Association are greatly indebted to the Caledonian Club for repeating the Burns concert next Monday night. We will have more to say on this matter later, but in the meantime we simply say "They are real jolly good fellows."

It's Just About Time They Cut Out The Comedy

NEW YORK, Jan. 31.—C. F. Graham, of Montreal, as a result of his conference with Tex Rickard this morning, believes that the championship fight will be held in Montreal. This was stated to the Canadian Press this afternoon by Louis H. Soloman, Mr. Graham's representative here, who was speaking for the Montreal promoter.

"As certain conditions are eliminated—and we are certain that they will be eliminated—the likelihood is that the fight will be held in Montreal," said Mr. Soloman. "Mr. Graham was very well satisfied with the interview which he had with Mr. Rickard this morning and though it is impossible to announce the details of the negotiations just yet, we are confident that Mr. Rickard will regard our proposition favorably. The very fact that he has taken it under advisement indicates that there is a good chance of the fight going to the Canadian city."

Mr. Graham plans to return to Montreal tonight and further negotiations with Rickard will be conducted through Soloman.

Splendid Progress Made During Year

Confederation Life's Report Reveals Healthy Business Increases

The report submitted to the shareholders and policyholders at the annual meeting of the Confederation Life Association is to be held in Toronto today shows a remarkable rate of progress in spite of the general business depression during the last few months of the year. While 1919 was a record year for the association the amount of new insurance written during 1920 exceeded that of 1919 by $3,876,284.00.

This healthy increase in the amount of business done is especially noteworthy. Also noteworthy is the splendid gain in insurance in force, which shows that the business is well looked after. Healthy gains in assets, surplus, etc., are shown and the company's investments are apparently well chosen and in good condition.

Sir Edmund Osler, who has been a vice president since 1912, having decided to lessen the number of his directorates, submitted his resignation as vice-president. This vacancy was filled by the appointment of Col. A. E. Gooderham, and the vacancy on the board by the appointment of Mr. B. B. Cronyn of W. R. Brock Co., This is the jubilee year of the Confederation Life Association And advantage is being taken of this occasion to present to the public a decided innovation by offering life insurance without medical examination. The Confederation Life Association is the first company to offer this form of insurance in Canada
