A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter XLIV

John Aldrich waited a little before he answered Marcia. In itself her demand for a masseuse was reasonable enough, from her point of view, although John man like, could see no necessity for such slavery to beauty. But Marcia's demand grew with her achievement. So long as he gave into them would they ever cease? Yet, perhaps Marcia was no different from other women of her class; no more selfish than many women, many men. She was simply a pleasure loving creature, who considered it only her right to live her life untrammelled, uninterfered, and spend her time and money as she desired.

"I will give you part of what you seem to think you need to save off old age, Marcia. We thought we were getting old together, you know. People will soon say that you are my second wife if you make yourself prettier than you are and—yonger looking."

"Nonsense! You are awfully handsome, John, and that gray hair is very becoming. Really, it makes you so distinguished-looking."

"Yet I'll wager you'd spend an hour of time and dollars in money to eradicate one single one in your own hair."

"Don't be ridiculous, John! You know it is different with a woman. She ages quicker than a man if she doesn't take care of herself."

"All right, have it your own way. Then you'll give me the extra allowance?"

"Half of what you ask for. That is the best I can do."

"Then I can have her only four times a week," Marcia pouted. "I suppose I'll have to make it do, but hate to."

This little extravagance had been added upon others until John felt no shock or surprise when Marcia demanded the larger allowance.

"If it hadn't been a masseuse, it would have been something else," he muttered as he left the house. "Might as well be that as anything."

This was the spirit in which John now acquiesced to Marcia's demands in as far as he could. There is, to anything to keeping the peace. Marcia did not weep as frequently as when they were first married and she could not have what she wanted or do as she wished. But she made John far more uncomfortable in other ways than the tears had done.

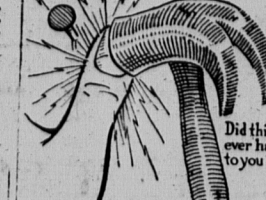

At times she felt he hated all her women friends. She quoted what they said, what their respective husbands did for them, until John would have liked to murder them all. She would tell of something she was going to have to him, intimating, then afterwards demand of John, telling her she could not endure the mortification if he refused. Her friends would call him stingy, she said, and be sorry for her. Or she would go into a rage.

"Oh, nothing. I just felt a bit curious about that's all."

"She'll think I am crazy," John muttered after he left the shop. "I guess I am—pretty nearly. But if she can look like that and work as hard as she does, who can't Marcia keep her looks when she has nothing to do but take care of herself?"

That the very fact that she worked hard, that her mind was occupied, kept her young, John could not know. He was the world of women through Marcia's eyes. He had been too busy always to spend time speculating about them.

and become hysterical. It was easier to give her what she wanted, then work to make ends meet, than it was to refuse her and go through the nerve racking hours that followed his refusal.

Marcia was all verve and vivacity easy and gay when she had had own way. When she couldn't there was a thorny hedge about her that John had learned to dread. The thorns pricked mercilessly. One of her sayings that used to rile John unspcakably was: "It's a lovely world if you wouldn't bother over trifles, John."

This usually after she had made some demand which he had granted against his better judgment; granted to keep peace.

Marcia was not the jealous sort. She felt too sure of her own attractions. She often said to Nell French: "John wouldn't look at another woman—I know him too well. Then I take good care he doesn't have any spare change to go phandering with. A man can't get very far away without money."

They both laughed as if it were a good joke. Yet Marcia had added that about the money just in a spirit of fun. She was sure of John. She loved him, was his wife. That told the whole story.

John stepped in the little shop that morning. His spirit needed bolstering and he never saw Muriel Duran that he did not feel her uplifting influence. It was the first time he had called in the morning and she showed her surprise.

John made some little excuse, but as she raised her smiling eyes to him he studied her face. For the first time since their acquaintance began, he looked at her closely. Her face was underlined, there were no signs of discontent about her mobile lips, no tiny wrinkles about her eyes. A certain quiet peace radiated from her.

"Do you employ a masseuse?" John asked, to be answered by a merry peal of laughter.

"A masseuse, of course not! I have neither the time nor the money to spend beautifying myself."

"Oh, nothing. I just felt a bit curious about that's all."

FASHION NOTES FROM PARIS

PARIS, Oct. 7.—Velvet—striped, stamper and plain, is in great request for gowns and wraps, also tailor-mades, and as regards colors, sapphires blue, bottle green, a bright red brown, and violet in which there is no tinge of red, promise to be first favorites. Careful attention, however, should be given to the choice of these colors, and the shades thereof, and an excellent plan is to stand in front of a mirror in a good light, take a large piece of the material, and hold it under the chin and above the forehead. If it brings out the tints of the eyes, shows up the hair, and beautifies the complexion, the hue may be safely adopted. In selecting a color to be worn by night the same tactics may be employed, but the fabric should be draped lower down on the neck.

Most of the furs in ordinary wear show considerable reductions in prices, compared with those of last year. Tempting prices are to be offered and the furriers are expected to do a large business. Thus a useful coney coat that sold last season for 1,000 francs will probably be obtainable for 700 francs. A sable marmot coat is one of the most serviceable purchases. A really good coat of this fur will cost from 750 to 800 francs, but it will last a lifetime, and rain will have no effect on it.

Every year there is something new in the development of the furrier's art, and among this season's novelties is a very beautiful fur called beaver coney. It is so skillfully prepared that only an expert can distinguish it from real beaver.

Checks and tartans have made their customary autumn appearance, and, as usual, extremists are favoring patterns only suitable for giants. A coat and skirt, for example, designed for a woman of medium height, boasted but four or five squares in all, and could hardly claim to be a success. Neither the tartan nor the check of the "most moderate dimensions" should be selected by the amateur dressmaker. There is at the moment plain and striped materials, and to the renovator, this will be welcome news.

ANOTHER WOMAN ESCAPES

Mrs. McCumber Avoided a Serious Operation by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Georgetown, Ill.—"After my first baby was born I suffered so with my left side that I could not walk across the floor unless I was all humped over, holding to my side. I doctored with several doctors but found no relief and they said I would have to have an operation. My mother insisted on my taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I soon found relief. Now I can do all my own work and it is the Vegetable Compound that has saved me from an operation. I cannot praise your medicine too highly and I tell all of my friends and neighbors what the Compound did for me."

Mrs. Margaret McCumber, 27 S. Frazier St., Georgetown, Illinois. Mrs. McCumber is one of the unnumbered thousands of housewives who struggle to keep about their daily tasks, while suffering from ailments peculiar to women with backache, sideaches, headaches, bearing-down pains and nervousness, and every such woman should profit by her experience and give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

Tells Of Many Sinful Cities

LONDON, Oct. 10.—There has been an almost universal recrudescence of sin, as expressed in crime, in Italy, Germany, France, Great Britain and particularly in America, said Dr. Ezra Tipple, president of the Drew Theological Seminary—one of the largest in the United States—at the Methodist Ecumenical Congress in London.

There were more arrests for murder in Chicago than in all England and Wales combined. Every year there were approximately 3,000 burglaries in Chicago, 7,000 in New York and 2,000 in London.

Dr. Tipple thought there had been a painful deterioration of modern manners, a growing vulgarity and recklessness in dress and behavior, and an increasingly alarming disregard for the sanctity of the home and marital relations.

During the last twenty years there had been granted by the courts of the United States divorce decrees to 3,765,182 persons, affecting, when all the adult and minor children were added, more than 5,500,000 people. The increase of divorces in England was also, to say the least, alarming.

"Christianity," said Dr. Tipple, "cannot yet be put on the scrap heap, let men say what they might concerning it."

Notice to Farmers

Don't Slaughter Thin Hogs

We note a tendency to sell hogs not properly fattened in fact in very thin, poor condition. This is a serious mistake from the farmers' standpoint, as no matter whether prices go up or down from present figures, no packer will continue to buy this unfinished, inferior stock. To persist in selling it farmers will ruin the reputation of Island Pork Products, to their own immediate and future loss.

Finish your hogs properly, sell when ready, and you will best serve your own interests, as well as those of the industry in general.
