A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

CHAPTER 1x

As the second year of their marriage was ushered in John Aldrich found himself working early and late without bettering his circumstances. He wasn't getting on in the world as he had hoped to, although "I slave myself almost to death", as he often told himself when too tired to do anything but crawl into bed after a late dinner.

He had said nothing more about the expense of the car, or of the entertaining Marcia insisted she do if she were to keep her friends. He was still in love. The clamour of Marcia still held him. But considering the short time they had been married it was strange how little they had in common. Marcia had her bridge, her teas, her motor rides, her own particular friends. John Aldrich had his work, the privilege of paying Marcia's bills and—little else. Yet Marcia often said:

"It must be wonderful to be a man, to be able to do what one likes, to go about without question. A woman is so dependent. She can't stir without an escort.

"So you think I do as I like, do you?" asked John, wondering.

"Of course you do! If you want to go to the theatre or to a cafe for supper you don't have to wait to be asked by a man! You can put on your hat and go. I think men have the best of it all round."

John wanted to tell her a few things, but restrained the impulse. What was the use?

That expression "What's the use?" was often on his lips and in his thoughts. He hated scenes, in which he differed in no way from men generally. He loathed a quarrel. It made him unhappy and also interefered with his work. So he let many things pass unnoticed, not realizing that there are people who, given an ell, will soon not be satisfied with the mile, they adopt to themselves.

Marcia had developed a self-pitying manner when she could not have her own way with John that was particularly aggravating. In fact, there is nothing more undermining to character than self-pity. If one of her friends had something she did not or could not have she would say:

"It's awfully mortifying to have them think I can't have things. I know they pity me and think you might give me as much as they have. I try to tell them I don't care, but all the time I do care, and care awfully. No one knows how much I have to give up."

"I can't see that you give up any thing you can possibly get," John once replied; "You keep my nose to the grindstone might close."

"That' right! No one pities me."

"Youre so sorry for yourself you cant see the good things coming your way, Marcia. I wish I were a Rockefeller or a Vanderbilt for your sake, but I am not! And for people in our position you do fairly well."

"I shall have to have some more money this month, John,' was her reply, apropos of nothing.

"What for?

"I lost at bridge twice last week. I have been having a run of bad luck lately."

"You remember, Marcia, I told you I would not pay any gambling debts. I don't gamble—can't afford to. I won't encourage you for two reasons. I cant afford it, and I hate to have you do it."

"But I must have the money. I lost to that obstreperous Mrs Calthorp. She's just rolling in money and insisted upon playing for such big stakes I got nervous. I believe she did it purposely to make me lose."

"How much?" laconically asked John.

"Sixty dollars."

"My God, Marcia! You mean to say that in two sittings you lost sixty dollars."

"Yes, and it was bad enough to lose it without you making a fuss over it! I'd rather lose a game to any one than that woman. I know I am a better player than she. She has been jealous of me, my playing ever since I joined the club.'

"I can't pay! It's impossible!

"You mean you won't? Then I'll have to borrow it again." The last word had slipped out unconsciously.

"You have borrowed money to pay your gambling debts! Who from?'

John's tone rather awed Marcia. It had a new, a steely ring she did not like.

"That's nothing. All the women borrow from each other when they run short. It was only a dollar or two frm Nell French."

"I will advance your allowance so that you can pay that woman, but that is all I can do. Better stop playing Marcia. If you lose again I can't help you out, and I don't want my wife to borrow from any one to pay her bridge debts."

"If I had a decent allowance I wouldn't have to! But when you pinch me down to the last penny I have to get it somewhere."

John said no more. He realized that Marcia had been worrying about this debt and was nervous.

New York Sales Are Enormous

Biggest Thing of Kind Ever Seen In That State, Says Big Wholesaler.

The fact that 625, 000 bottles of Tanlac have been sold in the state of New York since its introduction there less than one year ago, is a big business item that will attract unusual attention throughout the entire East, for nothing like it has ever happened before. It breaks all records.

Mr. George B. Evans, manager of the Gibson-Snow Company, the well-known wholesale druggists, with branches in Albany, Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse, recently announced that the preparation was now selling in their trade territories alone at the phenomenal rate of approximately 500,000 bottles a year.

"If the present rate continues," said Mr. Evans, "this state alone will probably require considerably over 750,000 bottles a year. This is a tremendous figure, but I am really conservative in making this statement."

Tanlac is sold in Charlottetown by Reddin Bros., and all leading druggist, every where.

Parts Most Vulnerable To Wear

The Problem Of Effective Chassis Lubrication

IT IS A SAFE PREDICTION to make in regard to the average car that after a season's use, if any parts are found badly worn, these will be the spring-pins and eyes, and the pins and bushings of the steering gear. This is simply because these parts are constantly heavily worked, are exposed to water and dust and, having no automatic distribution or lubricant to them, require individual oiling or greasing which they fail in some measure to receive. Engine and transmission parts may all be lubricated from three supplies of lubricant, which require only occasional replenishment, while each one of the spring and steering bearings calls for frequent special attention, the lack of which results in the early development of looseness and rattle at these points. In other words, most cars show signs of age from the lack of so-called "chassis lubrication" and one of the pressing problems is how to provide it effectively. The proposed solutions are as follows: To lubricate all these points with oil, from a magazine with pipes leading to all the bearings in question, through which lubricant can be supplied either automatically or by the occasional operation of a single lever. To furnish each bearing with some form of manual or automatic oil-feeding cup, which lets down the oil gradually, as needed, and thus requires but occasional filling—prevailing sentiment seeming to favor oil rather than grease lubrication for these chassis bearings. To do away with the need of lubrication by using lubricant impregnated bushings or bushings of such material as will not wear the pin, even if operated dry. To facilitate the supplying of grease to these bearings to such a degree that it will cease to be so laborious and dirty as to be neglected, by the abolition of the conventional grease cup and the substitution therefor of a grease gun which can conveniently be applied to each bearing to forcibly supply the lubricant in a handy, quick and cleanly manner, until the magazine type of chassis oiling becomes available the motorist can do something toward "keeping young" these parts of his car, by adopting either one of the improved types of oil-feeding cups or one of the high pressure gun outfits for grease lubrication. Fortunately, both classes of devices are applicable to all bearings at present served by standard grease cups and oil retainers and the labor and expense of making the change is not great in view of the results thus obtainable. At least these over-worked bearings are worthy of frequent remembrance.

SHORT LIVED GENERATOR

W. R. W. writes: Three generators have burned out on my 1919 ——— car. The last one had its bearings packed in hard oil and I complained as to this. It lasted only a month and now they claim that it is totally burned out, armature and all. What was the probable cause and who is at fault?

Answer: A generator, under ordinarily favorable conditions, ought to run 10,000 to 15,000 miles. We consider oil better for bearing lubrication than heavy grease, assuming that a generator receives proper attention. This one may have failed from insufficient lubrication, which wore the bearings so much that the armature core rubbed on the pole pieces and caused an armature burn-out, the heat developed being sufficient to spoil the field coils as well or it may have been that the armature was initially defective, causing its own destruction and the overheating of the fields. From what you have told us, we believe that you have a valid claim for a replacement.

ENGINE IS WEAK AT OPEN THROTTLE

V. B. J. writes: My engine gives good enough power and speed on level roads with only a little gas on, but when I open the throttle wide, it does not pull any harder. It does not miss or knock, but simply fails to give the power that it should, although I can hear the carburetor sucking harder. What is the difficulty?

Answer: Apparently, your engine does not get gas enough at full throttle to make a powerful mixture. Most likely your carburetor adjustment is wrong. If it has a low speed adjustment and a high speed adjustment, the latter is the one at fault, and it should be changed—probably by making it richer. Before readjusting the carburetor, make sure that there is no dirt in it or in the fuel line and that the air valve, if any, seats and opens properly. Your instruction book, doubtless gives full information as to caring for this carburetor, the type of which we do not know.

THE MARKETS

MONTREAL, Aug. 29 — The local egg market was firm under a steady demand for supplies to meet immediate wants and a fairly good trade was done. Feature of the trade was the increasing demand for small lots of strictly new laid eggs which are selling at 50c per dozen. The receipts yesterday were 2,624 cases, as compared with 2, 998 for the same day last week, and 2, 913 for the corresponding day a year ago.

Wholesale jobbing prices were quoted as follows:

Selected stock	45c to 46c
No. 1 stock	44c
No. 2 stock	38c

There was no actual change in the condition of the market for maple product, business being still very quiet and prices nominally unchanged with maple syrup quoted at $1.45 to $1.50 per tin of one gallon and maple sugar at 15c to 17c per lb as to quality.

The market for car lots of potatoes remains steady at $2 per bag of 90 lbs., ex-track, but the demand as yet for cars is somewhat limited and business in this respect was quiet owing to the fact that the offering on the city markets in waggon loads are ample to meet immediate wants and sales of good to choice stock were made at $1.75 to $2 per bag of 80 lbs.

New York, August 26.— Eggs steadier. Receipts 14,190 cases. Fresh gathered, firsts, 37c to 40c; fresh gathered firsts, 33c to 36c; State Pennsylvania and near-by western hennery, whites, firsts to extras, 47c to 59c; do. browns, extras, 46c to 48c; do. gathered, browns and mixed colors, firsts to extras, 34c to 35c; refrigerator, special marks, 36c to 37c; do. firsts, 34c to 35c.

The receipts of butter yesterday were 7, 211 packages, as compared with 5, 691 for the same day last week, and 4, 019 for the corresponding day a year ago. The market was weaker again yesterday and prices at the auction sale scored another decline of 7-8c per lb, making a net drop in two days of 1 3-4 per lb. At Gould's Cold Storage a few hundred packages were offered of which lots of finest creamery sold at 37 1-2c per lb., delivered here, but the demand for the lower grades was slow. The trade in the open market was again very quiet, there being little demand from any source for supplies and round lots of finest creamery were quoted at 38 1-2c to 39c per lb. In sympathy with the above wholesale jobbers reduced their prices 2c per lb to 39c per lb. finest creamery in solid packages, and 40c per lb in 1 -lb blocks.

We quote wholesale prices for round lots as follows:

Pasteurized creamery	39 1-2c to 400c
Finest creamery	38 1-2c to 39c
Fine creamery	37 1-2c to 38c

The receipts of cheese yesterday were 12,238 boxes, as against 12,403 for the same day last week, and 8,179 for the corresponding day a year ago. A weak feeling prevailed in the cheese market and at the auction sale of Ontario goods the prices bid for white cheese were 1-2c to 1c per lb below the bids made on Tuesday, and for colored they were 1 3-8c to 1 1-2c per lb lower. At Gould's Cold Storage there were several thousand boxes offered but owing to the low prices bid factorymen in most cases decided to hold their goods until next week. There was practically no demand from over the cable for supplies and the market on the whole was dull.

COUNTRY CHEESE BOARDS

Iroquois, Ont., August 26 — At today's session of the cheese board 860 boxes were boarded, 425 colored and 435 white. The usual buyers were present. Johnston started the bid at 18c, Weir raised to 18 3-8c, Johnston raised 1-8c better and Weir finally raised the bid to 19c. No sales on board, but all sold on the street at 19c At the same date last year 755 boxes were boarded and the price was 26 1-2c.

Napanee, August 216.— At today's cheese board there were boarded 50 boxes of white and 765 colored. All sold at 19c.

Picton, August 26.— At the cheese board there were 1,180 boxes boarded. All sold at 19 5-16c.

Perth, Ont., August 26 — At the cheese board 857 boxes were offered. Part of these were sold at 18 1-4c and the balance shipped to cold storage.

Victoriaville, Que., Aug. 26.— At the cheese board today 1,500 boxes of cheese sold at 17 3-4c.

HAD A FINE CHANGE TO MAKE BUSINESS

He Couldn't Have Thought of the Hard Times.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.— Friends of Hendry P. Davison, of J. P. Morgan & Co., who is convalescent at a hospital, described today how he jested with surgeons and nurses as preparations were being made for his recent operation, about which there were grave fears. As he was about to be shaved, he was reminded of a story, and halted the proceedings till he told it. It was about a visitor to a small town who had difficulty in finding a barber. Finally, the only one available made the visitor lie on a bed for removal of his beard.

"Why did you do that?" asked the visitor, on arising after one of the smoothest shaves of his life.

"Because," answered the villager, "I am the town undertaker. I never shaved a live man before."

Lloyd George Replies To De Valera

LONDON, Aug. 27.—The text of the reply of Premier Lloyd George to Eamonn De Valera is as follows.

"Sir:

"The British Government are profoundly disappointed by your letter of August 24. You write of the conditions of the meeting between us as though no meeting had ever taken place.

"I must remind you, therefore, that when I asked you to meet me six weeks ago I made no preliminary conditions of any sort. You came to London on that invitation and exchanged views with me at three meetings of considerable length. The proposals I made to you after those meetings were based upon full and sympathetic consideration of the views which you expressed.

"They were not made in any haggling spirit. On the contrary, my colleagues and I went to the very limit of our powers in endeavoring to reconcile British and Irish Interests. Our proposals have gone far beyond all precedent and have been approved as liberal by the whole of the civilized world. Even in quarters which had shown sympathy with the most extreme of the Irish claims they are regarded as the utmost which the Empire can reasonably offer or Ireland reasonably expect.

"The only criticism of them I have yet heard outside Ireland is from those who maintain that our proposals have overstepped both warrants and wisdom in their liberality. Your letter shows no recognition of this, and further negotiations must, I fear, be futile, unless some definite progress is made towards acceptance of a basis.

"You declare our proposals involve the surrender of Ireland's whole national tradition and reduce her to subservience. What are the facts? Under the settlement we outlined Ireland would control every nerve and fibre of her national existence. She would speak her own language and make her own religious life; she would have complete power over taxation and finance, subject only to an agreement for keeping trade and transport as free as possible between herself and Great Britain, her best market.

"She would have uncontrolled authority over education, and all moral and spiritual interests of her race; she would have it also over law and order, over land and agriculture, over conditions of labor and industry, over the health and homes of her people, and over her own defense.

"'She would, in fact, within the shores of Ireland, be free in every respect of national activity, national expression and national development. The states of the United States union, soverign though they be, enjoy no such range of rights.

"Our proposals go even further, for thty invite Ireland to take her place as a partner in the great commonwealth of free nations, united by allegiance to the King.

"We consider these proposals completely fulfill your wish that the principle of government by consent of the governed should be the broad and guiding principle of the settlement which your plenipotentiaries are to negotiate.

"That principle was first developed in England and is the mainspring of the representative institutions which she was first to create. It was spread by her throughout the world and is now the very life of the British commonwealth.

"We could not have invited the Irish people to take their place in that commonwealth on any other principle, and we are convinced that through it we can heal old misunderstandings and achieve an enduring partnership as honorable to Ireland as to the other nations of which the commonwealth consists.

"But when you argue that the relationship of Ireland with the British Empire are comparable in principle to those of Holland or Belguim, with the German Empire, I find it necessary to repeat once more that those are premises which no British Government, whatever its complexion, can ever accept.

Times Is Optimistic

LONDON, Aug. 30.—The London Times says editorially today that it prefers to take, on the whole, an optimistic view of the German-American peace treaty, but it does not believe "the Allies will be contented to continue to do the drudgery of execution of peace while the United States stands at a convenient distance to reap the share of benefits that may emerge."

The newspaper welcomes the treaty, however, as the first definite indication of renewal of United States active interest in European affairs.

Failure by the United States to ratify the defensive convention between the United States, Great Britain and France is considered by The Times to have been one of the chief causes of friction, which, it says impeded developments of the Entente and the maintenance of peace in Europe ever since the war.

Probing Quebec Boat Tragedy

QUEBEC, Aug. 29.—The tragedy which was enacted here on Saturday morning on board the steamer Maskinonge, anchored in the St. Lawrence resulting in four Chinamen being shot to death and two others being wounded is being investigated by the officers of Attorney General's Department.
