

In Memoriam CENTRAL GUARDIAN

MRS. EVERETT BEAGAN

There passed away at the City Hospital, the soul of Mrs. Everett Beagan on July 11th, 1942. Only Christian Faith can reconcile us to the loss of a wife and mother in the home, and our belief of her eternal reward after an exemplary life, in which devotion to husband and family was her supreme interest.

Mrs. Beagan was a life-long member of the Catholic Church. The funeral obsequies were performed by Reverend Louis Dougan at St. Dunstan's Basilica. Reverend Father Dougan also presided at the grave, in the Roman Catholic Cemetery.

Little ones and father weeping know you watch us just the same, You and we are in God's keeping Blessed be His will and Holy Name.

A Clam-Bake On The Shore

The following poetry was written many, many years ago, in the good old days when the S. S. Princess ran on the Charlottetown-Pictou route and is published by the request of one of the residents of Keppoch of those days and will recall many happy memories.

The heather is on fire and the news is in the air, You can hear it in the ocean's breakers' roar; And the people of fair Keppoch are gathering far and near For there's going to be a clam-bake on the shore.

In the morning bright and early when the dew was on the grass, And all nature had thrown open wide the door; You could see the birds a-winging and hear them all a-singing, "There's going to be a clam-bake on the shore."

The Robertsons and Carters the Poles and the McLeods, With Patons, Reddins, Welmers galore; Mixed with Large and Nash and Farquharson, and every other mother's son, Are invited to the clam-bake on the shore.

The clams in pristine juice and glory, without the aid of Gilt or Tory, Are provided for the people rich and poor, Who in spite of wind and weather will all sit down together, And enjoy the glorious clam-bake on the shore.

The bonfire will be blazing and the folkies to be singing, At the Princess as she looms in sight once more; As with story, song and laughter, with a dance to follow after, We shall linger round the clam-bake on the shore.

Then here's to lovely Keppoch and to friends we hold so dear, May we meet again when this brief life is o'er; In the home beyond the River where we'll all sit down together, And enjoy eternal clam-bakes on the shore.

Says Statement Was Not Intended For Publication

LONDON, Sept. 14.—(CP Cable)—Air Marshal Harold Edwards, chief of the Royal Canadian Air Force in Britain, today expressed hope that "the tempest caused by some off-the-record remarks of mine" had subsided in Canada. Receiving a visiting party of Canadian editors Sept. 5, the Air Marshal outlined his plan of "Canadianization" for the R.C.A.F. overseas and rebuked those in Canada who, he said, saw in such a program a tendency toward splitting the Empire. His comments, reported in a Canadian Press Cable, drew criticism from some quarters in Ottawa and elsewhere. (The Canadian Press Staff Writer understood that the part of Air Marshal Edwards' interview material he used was "on the record" and that other material from the interview, and not used, was off the record.) "The touring Canadian newspaper party visited headquarters," said the Air Marshal today, "and I explained to them that I disliked talking off the record but since they were so interested in getting the complete background of Canada's fighting forces overseas I would make an exception in this case. Consequently I talked freely man to man.

"Misunderstanding"

"Unfortunately one member of the party did not understand that my rather outspoken references were not for publication. It was a case of sheer misunderstanding, for which no one was to blame. I have always placed such faith in the press that I have never deemed it necessary to see their stories before release. I accept full responsibility for all I said. I was not misquoted, but I think it my duty to point out the foregoing facts. "I am very pleased to learn the information I had received that the Canadian press is anxious to get the Mail of Toronto were opposed to concentration of Canadian files in Canadian organizations is not true. I am sure that all who were concerned in the report, including myself, regret its publicity and any embarrassment or annoyance which it has brought to the publishers of these papers. "It might be a good thing if it were made clear once again to the people of Canada that so-called Canadianization of the R.C.A.F. has nothing to do with combat control, which must obviously be exercised by a single operational agency, but is designed solely to advance the efficiency and well-being of our lads for the benefit of the common cause."

Farming More Essential Now

Farming at one time was largely a matter only of planting, cultivating, harvesting, and to a considerable extent the actual consumption and utilization of the crops and live stock produced. Today, farming involves much more—long time planning, routing and fertilizing to improve quality and increase yields, fighting insect pests and disease of both plants and animals, marketing, and more immediately the proper utilization of all available chemicals, farm equipment, and other facilities to produce from the same acreage large quantities of food and raw material essential to the successful prosecution of the war. Chemistry opens up a large and scarcely touched field in the use of farm materials in industry to produce plastics and other material of utmost importance in war. Thousands of individual articles are made from plastics, one of the main ingredients of which is farm-produced cellulose. Few people think of photographic film as being derived from the farm. However, it is made from cellulose, and a highly essential part of the film is gelatin, which is derived from the hides and hoofs of livestock. Two war "essentials" are smokeless powder and glycerin—both of which stem from the farm. Smokeless powder is based on nitro-cellulose, and cellulose comes from farm-grown products. Dynamite, a commercial, rather than a military explosive, is aiding in building highways, tunnels, canals, harbors, and speeding up coal and other mining. Nitro-glycerin is one of the ingredients, and glycerin is derived from vegetable and animal oils from the farm. Every plant grown on the farm today may be a potential source of industrial cellulose, when research gets its chance to experiment and evaluate.
