IN MEMORIAM

MR S. A. McDONALD.

The death is announced at East Boston of Stephen Aeneas McDonald, son of Angus and Barbara McDonald. Death was due to pneumonia, following a very brief illness. He was a native of P. E. I. He leaves to mourn besides his father and mother, John P. McAdam, Savage Harbour; Miss Bessie McDonald, Roxbury, Mass.; John A. and Alexander in East Boston; Allan Joseph, on D.G.S., Tyrian; and Nellie, on the old homestead. One brother, Daniel Alexander, died seven years ago. A High Mass of Requiem was celebrated at the Sacred Heart Church.

ELLEN MAYHEW

Ellen, beloved daughter of Matilda and the late James Mayhew of Graham's Road, P. E. I., departed this life Dec. 31, 1914. For the greater part of her life she had been practically an invalid, having been afflicted with a malady which deprived her of the use of speech and rendered her incapable of enjoying life. For some months past she had not seemed quite as well as usual, but no thought of her death was entertained by her friends until the day before she died, when she suffered considerably and where she suffered till the Angel of Death mercifully released her. The funeral was on Jan. 2nd to the Methodist Cemetery at Margate, where she was laid to rest beside her father who had been called away only two months. "She is not for God, too early, we are left to mourn the loss of our brother James F., at home, and another brother, Edward, residing in Denver, Colorado. "Safe in the arms of Jesus," "Safe on His gentle breast, There by His love 'erestabed, Sweetly her soul shall rest."

FRIEND OF KAISER CHARGED WITH HIGH TREASON.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—The correspondent of the Morning Post telegraphs from Stockholm: "A sensation has been caused in commercial circles here by the news that Senator Posschl, the head of the great firm of L. Posschl and Company, has been arrested in Germany on a charge of high treason, being accused of trading with the enemy."

A Canadian named Casey was appointed to a government place. Technically, it had to be held by a lawyer which Casey was not. The Benchers of the Law Society, however, undertook to obviate the technicality. "Well, Casey, said the examiner, 'what do you know about law, anyway?' 'To tell the truth,' replied the candidate, 'I don't know a single thing.' The examiner reported in his affidavit 'that he had examined Mr. Casey as to his knowledge of the law, and, to the best of his information and belief, he had answered the questions that he had put to him correctly. The aspirant was thereupon admitted.

TOOK DOWN HER PRIDE.

A old Scotchwoman who had resisted all entreaties of her friends to have her photograph taken, was at last induced to employ the services of a local artist, in order to send her likeness to a son in America. On receiving the first impression she failed to recognize the figure in the picture as herself, so, card in hand, she set out for the artist's studio to ask if there was no mistake. "Is that me?" she queried. "Yes, madam," replied the artist. "And is it like me?" she again asked. "Yes, madam; it's a speaking likeness."

"Yes, madam; it's a speaking likeness. 'Aweel!' she said resignedly. 'It's a humblin' sight!'"

THE OLD BUFFER.

(From the London Sphere.) Over two Britain's famous aviators, over from France for a brief vacation, after accomplishing some brilliant deeds, were lunching in the West End of London recently, when a distinguished-looking gentleman came up and asked to have the honor of shaking hands. "You are an honor to any country, gentlemen, and we are proud of you."

Somewhat reluctantly—for these heroes are very simple minded and hate fuss—they shook. They did not, however, care to be honored, and side-tracked the old gentleman rather nastily. "Who is the old buffer?" they afterwards asked the waiter. "The old gentleman, sir, is the Grand Duke Michael of Russia. He very much wanted to have a chat with you."

CHARM OF THE HOUSE GOWN

Originality distinguishes the house gown of the present. In the robe which she puts on preparatory to welcoming the intimate friends of her circle a hostess may evince more individuality of taste than in any other costume worn beyond the door of her boudoir. Appreciating this fact she naturally makes the utmost of her good points, and as far as is possible disguises whatever physical disadvantages she may have.

At times the house gown is a bit daring because showing an advancing fashion which, when finally launched is an entirely different type of costume, seems not at all extreme. A few pairs of hands were flung upwards, expressive of horror, when the Turkish trouser skirt first appeared as the lower section of a house gown of much beauty, grace and individuality.

Sleeveless One-Piece Gowns

Almost sleeveless are some of the recent importations among house gowns beyond the door of her boudoir. These new models is a creation of silver lace and white crepe de chene. These two fabrics are employed in about equal quantities, for while the metallic lace veiling flesh hued chiffon makes the left half of the upper portion and the entire skirt section of the robe the crepe de chene, draped from the right shoulder, falls low at that side. From there it is drawn about the skirt, carried the same way up into a narrow band, which as a semibelt, crosses the right side of the figure between arm pit and waist line.

The widths of lace and the crepe falling from the shoulders to a trifle below the back of the neck, excuse for a collar is at the right side of the neck, where the crepe de chene's inner edge is bordered with a design in cerise velvet and embroidery. Obviously the idea of this model is to produce long lines. Not only by the straight fall of the lace and the low looping of the crepe, but by means of the perpendicular course of the vivid coloring bordering on the front of the robe and by its long diagonal slant from left to right the back of the garment. This is the ideal house gown for the woman whose figure has lost its girlish slenderness.

SOOT AND VEGETATION.

It is the general opinion of authorities that vegetation will not thrive in a polluted air. If then, people must pursue their work in places where air is polluted, they must seek certain losses over against the gain. Whatever good vegetation does to human health must be written off as a loss. Whatever trees, grass, and flowers accomplish in the way of raising and purifying the air, they must be written off as a loss. Whatever trees, grass, and flowers accomplish in the way of raising and purifying the air, they must be written off as a loss.

ing mental and moral tone, elevating standards stimulating pride in home and decreasing the function of the saloon, we must be content to do without, for the proof is clear that vegetation will not thrive in polluted air.

The Mellon Institute has issued a bulletin entitled "The Effect of Soot in Smoke on Vegetation." If you want to know what others as well as these investigators have found out on this subject, send the institute a quarter for this bulletin. They arrive at five conclusions, as follows:

1.—It is a matter of general opinion that smoke from mills injures nearby vegetation. They find this general opinion justified. The evidence consists in the general appearance of the plants and in what was seen when the leaves and wood were minutely examined. The smoke from the mills does not differ from smoke from other sources.

2.—Soot is poisonous to vegetation. When vegetation was subjected to small quantities of soot for a considerable length of time the effect was great enough to be measured. Pine trees suffered most. The harm was especially great in those trees and shrubs that do not shed their leaves in winter.

3.—Soot is a mixture of pure, finely divided carbon, ash tar and gases. An old theory was that the carbon particles stopped the openings in the leaves of plants and thus suffocated them. The Mellon Institute investigators think that the harm of soot does not result from stopping the pores of the leaves.

4.—It is their opinion that smoke kills plants by the action of the ash tar and the gases. Rains and dews dissolve some of the chemicals in soot, and these poison the plants.

5.—The gases from smoke, including those in soot, do harm to the vegetation. It is well established that the two sulphur gases, sulphuric and sulphurous acids, are injurious.

"It is also known that the gases—ethylene, a constituent of illuminating gas, carbon monoxide, benzene, hydrogen sulphide, and carbon bisulphide—are injurious to plants."

We beg to announce that we have opened an office at 156 Richmond Street, Charlottetown.

This Company under its Act of Incorporation confines its business to administration of estates, and trusts; it does not receive deposits, does not speculate with its own or trust funds, nor does it invest monies outside of the Maritime Provinces. In these times of financial trouble its position is stronger than ever.
