SOBS BECAUSE SHE COULDN'T PAY DUTY.

One little girl, entering the port of New York recently, cried because Uncle Sam did not want to collect duty from her. But she was only nine years old and has yet opportunity to learn that smuggling is one of the greatest feminine pleasures. The little miss who pined to pay was Adeline Barry, daughter of a prominent Chicago lawyer. With her mother, Mrs. Edward W. Barry, and her older sister, Geraldine, little Adeline arrived on the Prinz Friedrich Wilhelm.

"The little girl carried a doll almost as big as herself. She had bought it in Berlin. When she went abroad her grandmother had given her $20. The doll cost $19 and Miss Adeline still had 20 cents residuary estate.

On the dock she went up to the customs man in uniform, who was looking through her mother's trunks and held out her dimpled hand displaying two dimes.

"Please take this, I hope it will be enough," she said.

"What is it for?" asked the customs man.

"It is for my new dolly," proudly announced Adeline and she displayed her prize.

"But you do not have to pay any duty on it," explained the inspector.

"Won't you please take it? I am afraid they will take it away from me if you don't," said Miss Adeline tearfully.

Just to relieve her mind, the inspector took one of the dimes and put a customs stamp on the doll's foot as a mark of Uncle Sam's approval.

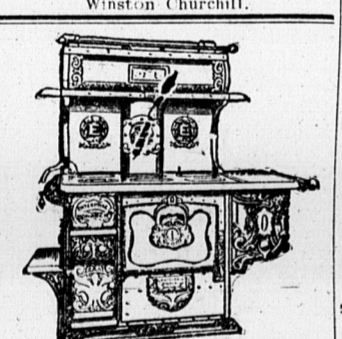

"I am going to keep the dime as a souvenir," said he. "It will be a reminder of the only person I ever met who really wanted to pay duty."

ALL LONDON IS NOW IN CASH PAPERS

tels, but the talk of the unprecedented number of visitors from the other side of the water is all hush. Londoners whose business constantly brings them in contact with the tourist classes one and all declare that there are not so many Americans in England now as at this time a year ago. This statement is borne out by the opinions of the steamship officials, who declare that ample accommodations could be found on any liner leaving New York, Boston or Philadelphia so far this summer. The preliminary scare about the danger of overcrowding may have kept some of the Americans away. All the best hotels complain that their regular American guests did not come this year. The proprietors do not appreciate the official and other guests of all nationalities who have taken their places.

MANY CANADIANS ON HAND.

The statements regarding the absence of the American visitors do not apply, however, to the Canadians. It does not take a very observant eye to detect the fact that visitors from Canada are more numerous in London today than ever before. Parties from Montreal, Toronto, Halifax, Ottawa and from Winnipeg, Vancouver and other cities of the West are to be found registered at nearly every hotel. The Dominion Premiers and Parliamentarians, with the official guests from the other colonies, are being elaborately entertained. Today the Parliamentary visitors, nearly all of whom are accompanied by their wives and families, became the guests of the nation and during the ensuing three weeks they will be entertained as such. Tonight they dine at the Waldorf Hotel and to-

ELABORATE POLICE PRECAUTIONS.

The police are taking the most elaborate precautions to prevent panics or other catastrophes on the days of the big parades. The possibility of fire in some of the mammoth grand stands along the route has been given the utmost consideration. Almost everywhere are hand grenades galore, while fire extinguishers are freely distributed about. It is probable that the police will follow the same plan adopted at the last coronation of erecting strong barriers at the converging streets so as to prevent any enormous crush of people. The entire route of the processions will be lined with soldiers.

The usual calculation for lining streets with soldiers is 10,000 troops per mile, but this is only for a single rank on each side of the street, and the figures have to be modified where, as in the present case, there are many points of the route at which double ranks are necessary, and others where considerable bodies of troops must be massed. It is probable that 60,000 soldiers of all ranks will be required for this purpose.
