Doris had come home from the pageant headquarters. She had not gone to the rehearsal of the chorus, but she had returned nervously at every opening of the door, feeling that it was as if she would be face to face with the rehearsal for the first time since that moment when she had come to the library at Three Oaks and discovered Lin with Mariana in his arms.

It had been a hot trying afternoon with Isabel frankly curious beside her, who had wondered openly why Doris failed to attend the chorus rehearsal. She blurted broadly at a lover's quarrel. Doris was too weary and heart-broken to resent her.

Once in her own cool bedroom with a grateful breeze stirring the crisp curtains at the opened window, she cast aside all pretense.

"She had a most refreshing tub, slipped into a negligee and flung herself on the couch for an hour's rest before dinner."

It was there that Blanche brought her. She had come to see Doris. For a moment Doris stared at it blankly. The rich color flooded her cheeks and receded, leaving her almost faint.

"That he dared to come, after all she knew!"

"Will you tell Mr. Cullum that I am not at home to callers this afternoon," she was surprised at her own level tone.

When the maid had gone with the message, she raised herself on one elbow and listened breathlessly. Her heart beat suffocatingly; she could scarcely hear for the pounding of the blood in her ears.

"There came the murmur of Blanche's voice. A reply from Cullum. The sound of that beloved voice sent a stab of pain through her."

"She heard Cullum's footsteps going slowly down her tiny hallway. They were going out. They were going out of her life forever."

"She strangled a sob and her hand latched her throat to keep herself from alling him back."

"The door closed behind him! To Doris, it meant the closing of the door upon the one great love of her life. She knew as well as if she had seen permitted a glimpse into the Book of Fate, that for her, there would never be another."

"When Blanche returned to announce dinner, she was still lying on the sofa, but there was nothing in her eyes, her face, her voice, to indicate that she had gone through an hour of torment."

"Her heart had been the battleground between love and pride. Pride had won. And though she could not have gone through greater agony if she had ducked her head in her two hands, the peace of irretrievable triumph was on her lips."

"Dick Jarvis called that evening. He brought a great basket of flowers. 'Saw that darn chatterbox at your office—what do you call her—Isobel?—and she said you were under the weather. What's the matter? Too much blossoms?'

"Just tired. Too much pagent."

"When will you ever learn to have sense?" he asked irritably. "Why don't you stop working for a lot of outcasts who don't thank you for your interference? I tell you it's foolish business. This alley trash likes being dirty, it likes getting drunk on Saturday nights, the wives expect it, and their husbands don't love them if they don't blacken their eyes."

"But how about the children?" murmured Doris helplessly. "They don't like being beaten. Babies don't like to be fed for lack of proper milk and ordinary hygiene."

"Stuff! You women who howl about the ill treatment of children don't know what a child needs any more. None of the old hen who babble about this 'charity stuff' have ever had children born to them. But every one of them would be born in a hell-hole if their mothers already raised a dozen, now it should be done."

"Let's not talk about it, Dicky," said Doris coolly. "We'll never agree."

"Some day you'll have to admit I'm right. I was right about Craig Cullum. 'Let's know. Wasn't I?'"

"Let's not discuss that either."

Good News For Ailing Women

Much has been said for and against proprietary medicines by the medical profession. It will interest every woman to know that in a recent country-wide canvass over 121,000 purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound are to the results received from its use. Therefore every sick and ailing woman owes it to herself to give this remarkably successful remedy a fair trial.

Hughes Gets View Of French Leaders

PARIS, August 5.—Before leaving for Brussels, Secretary Hughes had long talks not only with President Doumergue, but with former Presidents Millerand and Poincaré—with the former at his home in the Avenue de Villars, and with the latter after dinner at the United States Embassy. It is violating no secret of state, says de Matin, to record that the United States Cabinet chief was deeply interested in the conversations of the two former presidents.

"It has been a long time," the paper continues, "since Mr. Hughes was in Europe before, and he has followed the situation here from afar, sometimes perhaps seeing it through the distorting prism formed by the immense ocean."

"He sought to understand France's viewpoint, and in addition he did not conceal that the question of French safety and, consequently, the possibility of a new war, preoccupied to a high degree the Government and people of the United States, and he appeared strongly impressed with what M. Millerand, who spoke with great energy and frankness, said to him."

"In a word," concludes the paper, "Mr. Hughes left in a different state of mind from what he had when he arrived. He sees, above all, that if France is struggling with serious financial difficulties, she is by no means ready to abdicate all her rights in favor of financiers, however eminent, well intentioned and friendly."

Rum Running From Bermuda Abating

U. S. Prohibition Has Greatly Helped Tourist Trade, Declares Island Governor

NEW YORK, August 5.—"Because of the blockade of the rum fleet established off the American coast, the problem of the rum runner in Bermuda has practically settled itself in the last two or three months."

This was the statement today of Lieut. General Sir Joseph Asser, K. C. M. G., C. B., K. C. V. O., Governor of Bermuda, who is in New York on his way to British Columbia for a holiday.

"The business has been dying off very fast in the last two or three months, and in a short time it will be practically ended," he said, and added with a smile: "I'm afraid the people of Bermuda won't have very much money to play with then."

"As a matter of fact, Bermuda never did do a particularly heavy rum trade. The greater part of the liquor has been run from the Bahamas. There about fourteen to eighteen months ago we began to get it, but now it is almost over."

"About 80 per cent. of the money in Bermuda is derived from the tourist trade. An average of 26,000 persons come there every year."

This number is much greater than it was before prohibition, he admitted, saying that he believed the trade had practically doubled. "Just what is the attitude of the Government toward rum running?"

The conference considered several new applications for membership, including the League of Nations Association of Albania, Australia, Canada, Ireland, Luxembourg and the Jewish organization in Czechoslovakia.

Woman May Conduct Criminal Trials

(Canadian Press) NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—If the plans of admirers of Magistrate Jean Norris succeed New York will soon see a woman conducting criminal trials of the gravest character. Friends of New York's woman magistrate have started a movement for her elevation to General Sessions to succeed Judge O'Hanly, who has resigned because of his recent designation as leader of Tammany Hall.

Miss Norris has had no part in suggesting her elevation, but there is no doubt she would accept the honor. Miss Norris was appointed magistrate by the Mayor in 1919.

WHINKLES REMOVED IN 15 MINUTES—COST 3 CENTS! Quite a sensation has been created in certain social circles over the wonderful rejuvenating effects of a simple tarbock mixture which any woman can easily apply at home. The results are so remarkable that one has told others, who in turn have told many more, and now the new method is spreading over the face. An amazing transformation takes place, as the wrinkles, cross-eyes and creases are completely vanished! Facial contours are noticeably improved and the face looks years younger. The most skillful makeup artist could not produce such a whole-some effect as remains after the mixture has been washed off. Tarbock is of course perfectly harmless. Inexpensive. A small package from the drug-gist contains sufficient to bring the cost per treatment under 3 cents.

Sailor On Emden Thought To Be Dead Returns Home

(Associated Press) HAMBURG, Germany, Aug. 5.—After an absence of 11 years from home, Herman Look of Vollen in Eastern Friesland, who was a member of the crew of the famous German sea raider Emden, has reached home. His return caused no little surprise in his native village, for everybody, including his family, had believed him to be dead.

When the Emden was shelled and sunk, Look was taken captive by the British, who brought him to the internment camp at Singapore. Look and several companions made their escape. After a difficult journey through the jungle and through swampy regions they finally reached the ocean. They espied a row boat and started out, reaching the island of Sumatra after 12 hours. Here Look was again interned, and kept prisoner until the end of the war.

Not until recently could he accumulate enough money to take him back home.

League Associations Hear Japan and Haiti Protest U. S. Policies

(By Mail)

LYONS, France Aug. 1.—A Japanese move to have the League of Nations tell the United States the League stood for racial equality was made here recently.

When the International Union of League of Nations Associations met in annual congress, the Japanese delegation introduced a resolution providing that, without involving the question of immigration, all league members should apply the same requirements for admission and departure of commercial, mercantile and professional groups from other member countries, and also grant foreigners, regardless of race, equality with nationals in the establishment of business and professions.

Haiti Complains The United States also came in for an international grumbling about its military occupation by armed force of the republic of San Domingo and Haiti.

The placing of this question on the agenda of the International Union of League of Nations Associations followed a long effort on the part of Haiti and some of the smaller central American republics to get before an international organization Uncle Sam's alleged strong arm tactics in dealing with them.

Following an effort last year to set the question before the League of Nations the Latin Block of the League assembly had a private meeting at Geneva, where the question was discussed, in order not to stir up trouble with the League and engender animosity on the part of the United States. The question was tactfully side-tracked and kept under cover.

Entirely undaunted by this failure, however, the Haitian delegation then carried the question before the International Union of League of Nations Associations and it was written down on the agenda for the meeting.

The entire situation created by the United States military occupation of San Domingo was presented by Louis Danto Bellegarde, the Haitian minister to Paris, who, during assemblies of the League of Nations has created an international reputation for himself as a silver-tongued orator in French.

It was Mousieur Bellegarde who brought before the League assembly the question of South Africa's suppression by air bombing and other modern war methods of a native revolt in which a large number of negroes, including women and children, were killed.

Monsieur Bellegarde, who is himself colored, has won a marked position in League of Nations circles for his defense of the colored race.

The conference was composed of delegates from the League of Nations societies in nearly all of the leading countries of the world, including several, such as Russia and Germany, which are not members of the League.

As the delegates were in no way official representatives of their governments and therefore in no way restricted in their utterances by the policy or instructions of their governments, they were free to go into questions which the League, for political reasons, might prefer to dodge.

As a consequence, it is expected that the question of Uncle Sam's occupation of San Domingo will be treated with unglazed hands.

Reparations Discussed The conference tackled the problem of reparations which the League has side-stepped to date, but on the question of disarmament used as a basis of its discussion the League's proposed international treaty of mutual guarantee as a basis of disarmament.

Another important question to come before the conference was a proposition by Russia for the creation of an international council of arbitration and mediation.

The conference considered several new applications for membership, including the League of Nations Association of Albania, Australia, Canada, Ireland, Luxembourg and the Jewish organization in Czechoslovakia.

White Indians Not Really Exciting

There is great excitement in the little flock of Toronto evening papers over the "White Indians" brought by Explorer Marsh from Central America and which the visiting British Scientists may be asked to pronounce on. They may be "poor things" because of this notoriety thrust upon them, but exploited as a "side-show" at the Canadian National Exhibition this month, if the editors of said "evening papers" had read their Canadiana recently, they would not be so excited about white Indians, for they would know that fair-skinned specimens were very common once upon a time in Western Canada and not unlikely have blonde descendants there to this day.

The authorities is Francis Poole, C. E., who published in 1872 a most fascinating book—"A Narrative of Discovery and Adventure" in the Queen Charlotte Islands and the mainland of Northern British Columbia. Taking no liberties with Mr. Poole, I shall quote him exactly:

"It is a common error, common throughout the American continent even, to imagine that the aborigines of Canada and British Columbia are black. We are called whites to make a distinction; in reality the natural skin which prevails in most of the tribes is nearly as white as ours. The 'dusky' Indians of the Canadian prairies stain their skins with the bark of trees, and the 'blacks' in our colonies along the North Pacific seaboard, paint themselves with wetted charcoal. . . . The Ninestence tribe, generally known as the Cape St. James Indians, appeared to me the handsomest of the Eskimo personal tribe the most daring and trust-worthy."

"Another error concerns the color of their hair. No doubt it is dark; but the shade differs greatly. I saw a whole family or section of a tribe, on the British Columbia mainland, every one of whom had not only a clear white skin but light silky hair. On Queen Charlotte Islands there were numerous instances of auburn tresses and a few positively golden curls, amongst which Klue's little Klutchman daughter was conspicuous."

Sun Still Young States Scientist

PARIS, Aug. 5.—The sun is a mere infant, according to Professor Veromet, who today addressed the Cosmogony section of the scientific congress at Liege. Indeed, the old hoary ball of fire which it has been thought the centre of our solar system, is only three million years old. It is in lusty youth and can be expected to hold out for some time to come and supply our descendants with light and heat for countless generations.

Professor Veromet also informed his fellow scientists that he had, with a new perfected spectroscopic, reckoned the speeds of stars and had found one which holds a record of 1,300 kilometres per second.

Professor Belot, addressing the same body, took the wind out of the deluge story. There had been not one deluge, according to Belot, but thirty-two which had completely inundated continents. One of them left France some ninety kilometres below the surface of the sea.

In the radio electrical section of the congress, Doctor Proust described a new instrument which he had perfected to regulate the radiation of radium. This places the valuable but heretofore dangerous rays completely under the power of the doctor, and should mean a great deal to the medical world in the treatment of various maladies.

A similar apparatus for harnessing X-rays was announced by Doctor Cassett.

In the utilitarian section of the congress Doctor Lance described an apparatus which permits the burning of any type of coal in a blast furnace. This is immensely important, for hence at present is dependent for France at present is dependent coal required to make coke, which till now has been essential to blast furnaces.

Baseball League Lives By Passing The Hat

(Canadian Press) BLOOMSBURG, Pa., Aug. 5.—A baseball league on a firm financial footing, despite the fact no direct admission is charged for the game, is flourishing here, with but "one fly in the ointment." The "fly" happens to be the prouder of balls knocked out of the park. Recently several motorists were seen to stop their cars, chase the ball and hasten away without returning them. The league is an inter-city organization with four teams and the collections taken more than pay expenses, which amount to $1.70 for the game. One dollar is paid to each player. Each of two boys who chase balls knocked out of the field get 25 and 10 cents each is given the water boy and the score-keeper.
