Italian Divers

Locate Wreck Of Steamer

BREST, France, Sept. 3—The sunken wreck of the steamer Egypt, which went down after collision in 1922, has been located definitely by Italian divers.

The steamship Egypt, a passenger liner, was sent to the bottom on May 20, 1922, by collision with a French ship in a heavy fog off the coast of Spain, near Finistere, Spain, with the loss of about 100 passengers and crew.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a gown of white satin made on long simple lines, with long, tight sleeves extending to a point over the hands and the neck line fitting close to the throat and the skirt circular at the bottom, extending in a long train at the back.

The lovely bride was attended by her sister, Miss Helen Stewart as Maid of Honor and Miss Maude Stewart, as bridesmaid. The former's gown was of blush pink chiffon, and the latter one of sea green chiffon made alike with short puff sleeves and long circular skirts, shirred over the hips.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, where the floral decorations were similar to those at the church.

Mr. Cormack is conveying to local shippers and exporters. Mr. Cormack has been Trade Commissioner in Cuba for two years, and has just completed a tour across Canada interviewing shippers on Cuban trade.

"Business is changing in Cuba," Mr. Cormack states, "on account of the fact that sugar has for several years been selling below cost of production, and Cubans are making every effort to diversify their crops."

Mr. Cormack explained, but the trade commissioner was not of a similar opinion. He held that the government appeared to be determined to assist local growers, and so long as sugar is unprofitable the trade in potato stock will continue to decrease slightly, although the seed business would correspondingly increase.

"There are no immediate signs of any considerable improvement in the sugar situation, but with the diversification of crops, the reduction of imports and the fostering of numerous small local industries Cuba may be expected to weather the storm."

"The trade in general is affected by the low purchasing power of Cuba. Cuban merchants are as a whole very well disposed toward Canadians, and would deal with Canada whenever possible. Frequent steamer and ferry connections with U. S. A. coupled with a considerable tariff preference, granted after the Spanish American War to United States, makes competition difficult in many lines, but nevertheless the trade is normally worth about $8,000,000 a year."

Mr. Cormack will be in the province today, and will proceed from here to Grand Manan, following which trip he will return to Cuba.
